Globalisation and Labour in the Pacific: Re-evaluating the 1890 Maritime Strike

Symposium Proceedings

Hosted by
The New Zealand Work and Labour Market Institute
&
Auckland Labour History Group

Auckland, New Zealand
4 November 2010

Edited by
Frances Laneyrie
&
Raymond Markey
Table of Contents

Acknowledgments ......................................................................................................................... 9
Introduction: Globalisation & Labour in the Maritime Industry ......................................................... 11
  Ray Markey
Abstracts
Surfing the global wave from Australasia to Oceania: locating the 1890 maritime strike in the imagined temporal and spatial boundaries of Antipodean labour historiography .......... 17
  Lucy Taksa
The Impact of the 1890 Strike on the Formation of the New Zealand Labour Party .............. 17
  Peter Franks
The Impact of 1890 Maritime strike on the Formation of the Labour Party in Queensland ...... 18
  Bradley Bowden
Mahuki of the Red Plume – the Intersection of Labour and Race Politics in 1890 .............. 18
  Mark Derby
Recurring Patterns in Globalisation and Labour: A Comparison of the Maritime Disputes of 1890 and 1998 ............................................................................................................. 19
  Jo Kowalczyk
‘Australasian Assignations? The impact of the ‘1890’ generation and the Maritime strike on later Trans-Tasman unionism’ ....................................................................................... 19
  Melanie Nolan
A Tale to Squash Incipient Revolters: Combating the Legacy of 1890 in the Early Red Fed Years ........................................................................................................................................... 20
  Peter Clayworth
The New Zealand Coalminer and the Maritime Strike 1890: Billy Fairplay, Union Organisation and Cooperatives .............................................................................................................. 20
  Brian Wood
‘One of us must either go back or lie down’: The 1890 Maritime Strike as a Turning Point for Australian Radical Cartooning? ........................................................................................................... 21
  Nick Dyrenfurth
The Maritime Strike and Changing Attitudes towards Trade Unionism in New Zealand - A Newspaper Study ........................................................................................................................................... 21
  James Keating
Papers
The Impact of the 1890 Strike on the Formation of the New Zealand Labour Party ............ 23
  Peter Franks
The Impact of 1890 Maritime strike on the Formation of the Labour Party in Queensland ...... 33
  Bradley Bowden
Mahuki of the Red Plume – the Intersection of Labour and Race Politics in 1890 .............. 43
  Mark Derby
‘Australasian Assignations? The impact of the ‘1890’ generation and the Maritime strike on later Trans-Tasman unionism’ ....................................................................................... 53
  Melanie Nolan
The New Zealand Coalminer and the Maritime Strike 1890: Billy Fairplay, Union Organisation and Cooperatives .............................................................................................................. 69
  Brian Wood
The Maritime Strike and Changing Attitudes towards Trade Unionism in New Zealand - A Newspaper Study ........................................................................................................................................... 76
  James Keating