The Role of Business in the Development of the Welfare State and Labor Markets in Germany

Containing social reforms

Thomas Paster
Contents

List of figures and tables  x
Acknowledgments  xi
List of abbreviations  xiii

1 Introduction 1
  1.1 An outline of the book  5

2 Theory: economic interests and political constraints 7
  2.1 The business interests thesis  9
  2.2 The political accommodation thesis  13
  2.3 Summary of the main propositions  21
  2.4 Methodology: how to analyze changes in employers’ positions  23
  2.5 Looking ahead  26

3 The origins of employers’ associations: coordinating against organized labor 29
  3.1 The origins of employers’ organizations  30
  3.2 Why did employers decide to organize?  33
  3.3 Changing employer strategies: centralization and differentiation  38

4 Bismarck’s social reforms: employers and social pacification 48
  4.1 Social insurance as social pacification: the main actors and their goals  49
  4.2 Industry and work injury insurance: evading liability rules  52
  4.3 Employers’ positions on health and pension insurance  58
  4.4 Differences among employers with regard to social insurance  62
  4.5 Why did industry support social insurance?  63
5 World War I and its consequences: class collaboration in exceptional times

5.1 Class relations during the war: the state changes sides 68
5.2 The post-war situation: revolution and uncertainty 72
5.3 The Stinnes—Legien agreement: pacification by cooperation 75
5.4 Class collaboration as social pacification: employers' motivations 80
5.5 Class collaboration in practice: the erosion of consensus 83

6 Business and the origins of unemployment insurance: protecting work incentives

6.1 Business and unemployment insurance: two alternative explanations 87
6.2 The Wilhelmine Empire: employers against unemployment insurance 90
6.3 The introduction of unemployment insurance in the Weimar Republic 95
6.4 Changing employer positions in the Weimar Republic 99
6.5 What motivated industry to change its position on unemployment insurance? 105

7 Business after World War II: the 'social market economy'

7.1 The social market economy as an ideological alternative 112
7.2 Resort to social partnership 116

8 Post-war social policy reforms: containing welfare expansion

8.1 Social insurance reform: the conflict over universalism (1945–48) 120
8.2 Conflicts over the balance of power in self-administration 124
8.3 The 1957 pension reform: sidelining business 126

9 Codetermination: employers against economic democracy

9.1 Codetermination and the economic order: the goals of unions and employers 136
9.2 How codetermination came about: the policymaking process 141
9.3 Continued confrontation: the codetermination reforms in the 1970s 150
9.4 Codetermination today 155

10 Employers and the German model today
10.1 German reunification and the pacification of eastern Germany 162
10.2 Employers' offensive for welfare retrenchment 166
10.3 Industrial relations: employers' offensive for decentralization 172

11 Conclusions: how employers shaped the welfare state
11.1 The politics of pacification 180
11.2 The politics of containment 185
11.3 Codetermination: the limits to pacification and containment 187
11.4 Employers and the conservative welfare state 189
11.5 Political versus economic interests in explaining employers' choices 191
11.6 The VoC thesis: production strategies and preference changes 193

Notes 203
References 207
Index 225