Contents

List of figures v
List of maps ix
List of tables x
Acknowledgments xi
Technical notes xv
List of abbreviations xxi

1 Introduction: two tales 1
1.1. A medieval story: the bale on the beach 1
1.2. A modern story: three scholars and a piece of paper 5
1.3. The problem of the sources 8
1.4. Medieval and modern stories: a scholarly conversation 11

Part I Institutions 31

2 Merchants in their community 33
2.1. Writing the lives of merchants: Nahray b. Nissim 33
2.2. Merchants as a group: identification and self-definition 38
2.3. The geography of settlement: homes, origins, and migrations 39
2.4. Class and social position in Jewish community 45
2.5. Position in the Islamic community 50

3 The uses of commercial correspondence 56
3.1. Nahray b. Nissim receives a letter 56
3.2. The shape of commercial correspondence 64
3.3. Content analysis 77
3.4. Conclusion: the place of letters in commerce and in research 91

4 The nature of merchants’ trade 93
4.1. The bundle and the skins 93
4.2. The mix of commodities 95
4.3. Commercial transactions and the work of merchants 99
4.4. Conclusion: economic organization, risk, and labor 115
5. The human landscape: business relationships, institutions of law and government

5.1. Yeshu’a b. Isma’il: the difficult man
5.2. The organization of commercial services: principals, agents, and the group
5.3. Choosing agency: a question of management
5.4. Business and the legal system: theory and practice
5.5. The state and the merchants
5.6. Conclusion

6. Conclusion to part I

Part II Geographies

7. The geography of information

7.1. Efrayim sends four copies, then five copies
7.2. The postal infrastructure and the movement of letters
7.3. Letters, information, and the boundaries of trade
7.4. The geography of information: connectivity and change in the eleventh century
7.5. The boundaries of information: using letters to retrace geography
7.6. Conclusions

8. Commodities in a regional market

8.1. Israel’s eye medicine
8.2. The nature of regions in al-Shām: central markets, emporia, and hinterlands
8.3. What it meant to be a hinterland: Fustat as a distributor and consumer of goods
8.4. Conclusion: regions and market hierarchies, cities and metropolises

9. Individual geographies of trade

9.2. Connectivity: routes and central places
9.3. Individual itineraries
9.4. A Geniza business model
9.5. Conclusions

10. The contracting geography of the eleventh-century merchant network

10.1. Salāma b. Mūsā’s disastrous year
10.2. Two maps: comparing the Nahray generation with other generations of Geniza merchants
10.3. Edges
Contents

10.4. Centers: intensification 319
10.5. Putting together the pieces: explaining network contraction and intensification 322
10.6. Conclusions 330

11 Conclusion: The Mediterranean through the eyes of Geniza merchants 337
11.1. Putting the Islamic world back into the Mediterranean economy 337
11.2. Institutions, merchants, and the medieval Mediterranean 350

Glossary of terms 362
Bibliography 366
Manuscript sources 366
Printed sources 396
Index 416