The Business of Black Power

Community Development, Capitalism, and
Corporate Responsibility in Postwar America

Edited by
Laura Warren Hill and Julia Rabig

University of Rochester Press
Contents

Acknowledgments ix

Introduction 1
Laura Warren Hill and Julia Rabig

1 Toward a History of the Business of Black Power 15
Laura Warren Hill and Julia Rabig

Part One: Black Capitalism in Pursuit of Black Freedom

2 FIGHTing for the Soul of Black Capitalism: Struggles for Black Economic Development in Postrebellion Rochester 45
Laura Warren Hill

3 A McDonald's That Reflects the Soul of a People: Hough Area Development Corporation and Community Development in Cleveland 68
Nishani Frazier

Part Two: Selling Women, Culture, and Black Power

4 Black (Buying) Power: The Story of Essence Magazine 95
Alexis Pauline Gumbs

5 Creating a Multicultural Soul: Avon, Corporate Social Responsibility, and Race in the 1970s 116
Lindsey Feitz

Part Three: The Business of Black Power in City and Suburb

6 From Landless to Landlords: Black Power, Black Capitalism, and the Co-optation of Detroit’s Tenants’ Rights Movement, 1964–69 157
David Goldberg

7 “Gilding the Ghetto” and Debates over Chicago’s Gautreaux Program 184
Andrea Gill
Part Four: Community Development Corporations and the Business of Black Power Policymaking

8 "What We Need Is Brick and Mortar": Race, Gender, and Early Leadership of the Bedford-Stuyvesant Restoration Corporation
Brian Purnell

9 "A Fight and a Question": Community Development Corporations, Machine Politics, and Corporate Philanthropy in the Long Urban Crisis
Julia Rabig

Conclusion: Whose Black Power? The Business of Black Power and Black Power's Business
Michael O. West

Epilogue: Whatever Happened to the Business of Black Power?
Robert E. Weems Jr.

List of Contributors

Index