THE COMMERCIAL RELATIONS OF ENGLAND AND PORTUGAL

BY

V. M. SHILLINGTON
(Cairnes Research Student of Girton College, Cambridge)

AND

A. B. WALLIS CHAPMAN
(Honours School of Modern History, Oxford)

LONDON
GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, LIMITED
NEW YORK: E. P. DUTTON & CO.
PART I: MEDIAEVAL
By V. M. SHILLINGTON

INTRODUCTION ................................................................. X
BIBLIOGRAPHY AND LIST OF MANUSCRIPT SOURCES .... XV

CHAPTER I
THE ALLIANCE BETWEEN ENGLAND AND PORTUGAL IN THE MIDDLE AGES

CHAPTER II
EARLY COMMERCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN ENGLAND AND PORTUGAL
First traces of Portuguese merchants in England—Their treatment in England—Episode of La Cardinale—Dealings of Henry III. with Portuguese merchants in Bordeaux — Nature of Portugal’s trade with England — Commercial policy of King Diniz of Portugal — Disputes between the Portuguese merchants and Edward I.’s French subjects — Settlement by arbitration — Recognised position in England of the Portuguese merchants — Carta Mercatoria — Favourable policy of Edward III. towards Portuguese merchants — The English king’s treaty with the merchants of Lisbon and Oporto — Decision of an English admiral with regard to captured Portuguese merchandise...

CHAPTER III
GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE TRADE BETWEEN ENGLAND AND PORTUGAL

Entry of English merchants into trade with Portugal — Prosperity of Lisbon — The wine trade — Position of English merchants in Portugal — Portuguese merchants in England under Edward III. and Richard II. — The Treaty of Windsor, and the flourishing state of the trade during the years following it — Portugal’s trade with England, as seen in the “Libelle of English Polycye” — English merchants acquire new privileges in Portugal — Irish merchants in Portugal — Petitions of English merchants to Alfonso V., 1454 and 1458 — Commercial effects of the alliance of 1386 — Embassy of John II. to Edward IV. — Embassy of Henry VII. to John II. — End of the mediaeval period...

CHAPTER IV
RISKS AND VICISSITUDES OF THE TRADE

Danger of shipwreck — Cases of shipwrecked Portuguese merchants robbed by English subjects — Their petitions for compensation or restitution — Procedure in such cases — Other dangers, piracy, unlawful arrest, detention in English ports — Some periods worse than others — The
CHAPTER V

GENERAL CONDITIONS OF THE ANGLO-PORTUGUESE TRADE
ABOUT THE MIDDLE OF THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY

English and Portuguese ports concerned in the trade—Ships—Merchants—Cargoes—Customs duties paid at English ports—Town duties—Payments made in Portuguese ports—Petitions of the English merchants in Lisbon, 1454 and 1458—Malpractices of the Portuguese customs' officials in respect of the tithing of English cloths—The door-keeper of the custom-house—Negligence and dishonesty of the tithing officers—Disputes as to the value of the cloths—Difficulty of collecting the money due to English merchants for goods sold in Lisbon—Other conditions of the life and trade of the English in Lisbon. ... 102-126

PART II: MODERN

By A. B. WALLIS CHAPMAN

CHAPTER I

COLONIAL RIVALRY
(1487-1580)

Relative position of the English and Portuguese nations in the beginning of the sixteenth century—Growing estrangement—Influence of Spain—Effect of the English Reforma-
CHAPTER II

THE COMPANY OF MERCHANTS TRADING TO SPAIN AND PORTUGAL

(1577-1640)

Union of Spain and Portugal—Philip II. and the English in Portugal—Influence of commercial interests makes for peace, and of colonial interests for war—Expedition of 1589—Renewed disputes about African trade—Trade with the East Indies—Treaty of 1604—It ignores colonial trade—Effect of treaty on home trade—Revival of the Company of Merchants trading to Spain and Portugal—Its previous charters (1530 and 1577) and history—Relative positions of London and provinces in Company—Exclusion of retail traders—Quarrel with Chester (1579 et seq.)—Effect of union of Spain and Portugal upon the Company—Trade during war—Commercial stipulations in Treaty of 1604—Grievances of English in Spain and Portugal—Renewal of the Charter of the Spanish Company, 1605—Petitions for and against it—Nullifying Act of 1606—Movements for renewal of Company—Rivalry of mere merchants and manufacturers—Decay of trade—English traders as intermediaries between Portugal and the Eastland cities—Piracy—Cloth trade—Newfoundland fish trade—Decay of Portuguese spice trade—Rise of Brazil trade (sugar and tobacco)—Difference of Anglo-Portuguese relations in 1580 and 1640...
CONTENTS

CHAPTER III
THE LISBON FACTORY AND THE TREATY OF 1654
(1640-1654)

CHAPTER IV
THE METHUEN TREATY
(1654-1703)

Marriage of Charles II. and Catherine of Braganza—Reasons for marriage—English support of Portugal against Spain—English mediation between Portugal and Holland—Anglo-Portuguese Treaty of 1661—Cession of Bombay and of Tangiers—Anglo-Portuguese trade—Carrying trade—Brazil provisions—Wine and Brazil trades—Amount of Portuguese imports to England—Sugar trade—Portuguese currency—Competition of Brazil and plantation sugars—Clandestine export of bullion from Portugal—Portuguese prohibitions of foreign goods—Cloth trade in Portugal—Seeming separation of English and Portuguese commercial interests—England needs the political assistance of Portugal—Effect of Anglo-French wars on Anglo-Portuguese wine trade—Decadence of cloth trade—Negotiations for Methuen Treaty—Result of treaty—In what respect was it a bribe to Portugal? . . 205-226

CHAPTER V

THE ENGLISH FACTORIES IN PORTUGAL AND THE BRAZIL TRADE

(1660-1756)

CHAPTER VI

THE COMPANY OF THE WINES OF THE ALTO DOURO

(1756-1787)

Portuguese revolt against English influence—Question of brokers—Revival of Portuguese industry—Effect of the Sumptuary Laws (1749-58)—Ministry of Pombal—His

CHAPTER VII
THE BRAZIL TRADE
(1786-1807)