

Confronting finance

Mobilizing the 99 per cent for economic and social progress

Edited by Nicolas Pons-Vignon and Phumzile Ncube

International Labour Office • Geneva

Contents

Foreword	v
Preface	ix
Acknowledgements	xii
Introduction: What Europe can learn from the South	xiii
PART I Making sense of Europe's turmoil	1
Bernadette Ségol / The crisis: The response of European trade unions	3
Vasco Pedrina / The euro crisis and the European trade union movement	7
Frank Connolly / The EU "austerity" deal won't work – Irish workers face a grim future	11
Dan Gallin / Summer days on Utøya	15
Elmar Altvater and Birgit Mahnkopf / European integration at the crossroads: Deepening or disintegration?	19
Jacques Sapir / Is the Eurozone doomed to fail?	23
PART II Whither neoliberalism?	29
James K. Boyce and Léonce Ndikumana / How capital flight drains Africa: Stolen money and lost lives	31
Milford Bateman / The microfinance delusion	35
Conor Cradden / The true cost of doing business	41
Sebastian Dullien / The costs of the financial crisis of 2008–09: Governments are paying the tab	45
PART III Defending workers: Fresh ideas, new mobilizations	51
Cathy Feingold / The march to protect worker rights and the middle class	53
Steven Toff and Jamie McCallum / Supporting dissent versus being dissent	57
Frank Hoffer / Decent work 2.0	63
Andreas Bodemer and Ellen Ehmke / Working for a social protection floor	69
Elaine Sio-ieng Hui / Trade union reform and labour legislation in China: An interview with two labour activists	73
Eric Lee / Global labour online campaigns: The next ten years	79

PART IV Looking ahead	83
Hein Marais / Seven reasons why a universal income makes sense in middle-income countries	85
Richard Hyman / Economic democracy: An idea whose time has come, again?	91
Malte Luebker / A tide of inequality: What can taxes and transfers achieve? .	97
Toby Sanger / Taxing finance	103
Christian Kellermann / A Plan B for the world economy	109
Edward Webster / The dilemma of job creation and decent work	115