Disruptive Innovation in Chinese and Indian Businesses
The strategic implications for local entrepreneurs and global incumbents

Edited by Peter Ping Li
Contents

List of illustrations xv
List of contributors xvii
Preface xxiv

1 Introduction: disruptive innovation from the bottom of the pyramid: the strategic implications for local challengers and global incumbents 1
PETER PING LI

PART I
The contexts for DI from China and India 31

2 Economic competitiveness and disruptive innovation: exploring the macro and micro contexts in China and India 33
KIRANKUMAR S. MOMAYA AND RUCHITA GUPTA

3 The role of government in an emerging disruptive innovation: the case of E-bikes in China 50
YI RUAN, CHANG-ChIEH HANG, YANMIN WANG AND RUFEI MA

4 The emerging pattern of disruptive innovation from the bottom of the pyramid 68
XIAOBO WU AND YANBIN JIANG

PART II
The strategies of DI for local challengers 83

5 Mapping innovations in the disruptive innovation realm in India: what and where in the national pyramid of India 85
KARUNA JAIN, MUKUNDAN R. AND DHARMESH GUPTA
Contents

6 Transformative capacity and absorptive capacity: the rise of Chinese wind turbine manufacturers 109
SUNNY LI SUN AND XIAOMING YANG

7 Disruptive innovation in China's “shanzhai” cell phone industry: theory-building via case studies 136
JIANGHUA ZHOU, JIZHEN LI, AND YUNHUAN TONG

PART III
The strategies of DI for global incumbents 165

8 Disruptive innovation at the bottom of the pyramid (BOP): what role can Western incumbents play? 167
CONSTANTINOS C. MARKIDES

9 The new wave of disruptive innovation from China: why and how global incumbents need to respond 179
PETER J. WILLIAMSON AND EDEN Y. YIN

10 Ambidextrous capability: the case of Japanese enterprises 199
MASATOSHI FUJIWARA

11 Conclusion: future research agenda 218
PETER PING LI

Index 224