Preface                                                                  xiv

Introduction                                                            xvii

SECTION 1: FOUNDATION                                                  1

Chapter 1: Understanding Communication                                  3

  Proposition 1: Communication Can Best Be Described in Terms of Probabilities  5
  Proposition 2: Context Shapes the Probabilities by Creating Default Assumptions  10
  Proposition 3: Context Building Is a Dynamic Process                     12
  Proposition 4: The Context May Act Like a Black Hole                    13
  Proposition 5: Context Construction Is Uniquely Sensitive to Time Sequencing  14
  Proposition 6: There Are Multiple Messages in Each Communication Event   15
  Proposition 7: Content and Context Interact to Produce Meaning          16

Implications of the Propositions                                        18
