Industrial Policy in Egypt 2004–2011

Markus Loewe
Contents

Abbreviations

Summary

1 Introduction

2 Industrial policies in developing countries – a conceptual framework

3 The context of industrial policy-making in Egypt from 2004 to 2011
  3.1 Framework conditions for economic development
  3.2 Main challenges for industrial transformation
  3.3 The history of industrial policy from 1952 to 2004
  3.4 The political constellation between 2004 and 2011

4 Strategies and instruments of industrial policies in Egypt from 2004 to 2011
  4.1 General economic policy reforms
  4.2 The ‘Egypt Industrial Development Strategy’ of the Ministry for Trade and Industry
  4.3 Micro- and small enterprise promotion by the Social Fund for Development
  4.4 The Ministry of Investment and the General Authority for Investment and Free Zones
  4.5 Strengths and weaknesses of the strategies and instruments

5 Effects of industrial policies in Egypt from 2004 to 2011
  5.1 Macro-level evidence
  5.2 The instruments and their implementation
  5.2.1 Effectiveness
  5.2.2 Efficiency
  5.2.3 Transparency and fairness
  5.2.4 Relevance
  5.3 Explanation for the strengths and weaknesses
  5.4 Who benefited and who did not

6 After Mubarak ... a new beginning
  6.1 Political and economic developments since the revolution in 2011
  6.2 Lessons learnt
  6.3 Recommendations for the new government
  6.3.1 Reforming the framework of industrial policies
  6.3.2 Reorganising the making and management of industrial policies
  6.3.3 Redesigning industrial policies

Bibliography

List of interviewees

Annex