About the author x
Preface xi
Acknowledgements xv

PART I  FOUNDATIONS OF ENTREPRENEURSHIP

1  Entrepreneurship: Changing the world . . . one idea at a time  3
   Entrepreneurship: Why it’s not synonymous with new venture formation  4
   Why entrepreneurship is important: Economic growth, “giving back,” and maximizing human motivation  8
   Acquiring the knowledge we seek: Why the insights of entrepreneurs—even highly successful ones—are often not enough  19
   A roadmap of this book: Its special features  23

2  Cognitive foundations of entrepreneurship  26
   Human cognition: Its basic nature—and important limitations  28
   Creativity: Where entrepreneurship begins  37
   Creativity and innovation: From ideas to reality  49
   Entrepreneurial cognition: Inside the mind of the entrepreneur  52

3  Opportunities: Their nature, discovery, and creation  59
   Opportunities: Their basic nature  62
   Opportunities: Discovered, created or both?  62
   Opportunity recognition: The role of information, experience, and social networks  66
   Individual differences in opportunity recognition: The nature and impact of alertness  68
   Cognitive foundations of opportunity recognition: Pattern recognition, structural alignment, and regulatory focus theory  71
   How entrepreneurs can become skilled at recognizing opportunities  80
PART II  GATHERING ESSENTIAL RESOURCES

4  Feasibility analysis . . . and other essential information: What entrepreneurs need to know before they begin
   Is the opportunity worth pursuing? Basic dimensions of feasibility analysis
   Industry analysis: Why some industries are more favorable for new ventures than others
   Other essential information: Being familiar with key government policies and regulations

5  Transforming ideas into reality: Careful planning . . . and improvising
   Business plans: Formal guides to creating value
   The importance of flexibility: Improvisation and bricolage
   Effectuation: Using what you have to get where, perhaps, you want to go

6  Assembling key resources I: Obtaining, managing, and using financial assets
   Financial resources: Where to find them—and how to obtain them
   Estimating financial needs: How much will it cost to get started, and how will these funds be used?
   Why obtaining financial resources is often difficult: Overcoming investors’ caution

7  Assembling key resources II: Building a strong founding team, developing social networks, and obtaining expert advice
   Building a strong founding team—and beyond: Developing the new venture’s human capital
   Developing high-quality social networks: Why who you know really does matter
   Obtaining expert advice

8  The central role of entrepreneurs: How their skills, motives, and characteristics shape new venture success
   Essential skills entrepreneurs need—and should develop
   Are entrepreneurs really different? And if so, why?
   Emotion and passion: The “feeling” side of entrepreneurship
PART III MANAGING AND BUILDING THE NEW VENTURE

9 Legal aspects of new ventures: Non-disclosure and non-compete agreements, intellectual property, and franchising 237
Can you legally start a new venture? Not if you have signed agreements that limit your right to do so 240
Legal protections for what you have created: Copyrights, trademarks, and patents 243
Other means of protecting the products of your creativity: Trade secrets and complementary assets 257
Franchising: A new venture “in a box”? 261

10 Managing a new venture: What entrepreneurs should know to do it well 267
Motivating employees—and understanding your own motives 269
Leading and exerting influence 278
Making effective decisions 287

11 Building the new venture: Strategies for attaining growth 298
Why new ventures seek growth—and is it always the best route to success? 299
Strategies for attaining growth 306
Entrepreneurial orientation (EO): A key strategy for new ventures 316

PART IV DEALING WITH ADVERSITY AND LEAVING THE NEW VENTURE

12 Endings . . . and beginnings: How—and when—entrepreneurs leave the companies they founded 327
Different ways of saying “farewell” 328
Is taking their company public always the “golden ring” for entrepreneurs? 335
Exit by necessity rather than choice: The effects of business failure 344

Author index 357
Subject index 360