Science Fiction and Organization

Edited by Warren Smith, Matthew Higgins, Martin Parker and Geoff Lightfoot
Contents

Notes on contributors vii

Introduction: more amazing tales 1
MATTHEW HIGGINS

PART I
For the world is hollow and I have touched the sky* 13

1 ‘Give me your mirrorshades’: science fiction
‘methodology’ meets the social and organizational sciences 15
DAVID McHUGH

2 Science fiction and the making of the laser 31
CHRISTOPHER HALEY

PART II
Mirror, mirror* 41

3 Metropolis, Maslow and the Axis Mundi 43
JAMES M. TOLLIVER AND DANIEL F. COLEMAN

4 The rape of the machine metaphor 61
NANETTE MONIN AND JOHN MONIN

5 Organizing men out in Joanna Russ’s The Female Man and Fay Weldon’s The Cloning of Joanna May 73
MARIA ALINE FERREIRA
Contents

6 Drowned giants: science fiction and consumption utopias 90
   JAMES A. FITCHETT AND DAVID A. FITCHETT

7 Spectacle and inter-spectacle in The Matrix and organization theory 101
   DAVID BOJE

PART III
Is there in truth no beauty?* 123

8 Reading Star Trek: imagining, theorizing, and reflecting on organizational discourse and practice 125
   DONNCHA KAVANAGH, KIERAN KEOHANE AND CARMEN KUHLING

9 From the Borgias to the Borg (and back again): rethinking organizational futures 143
   CHRIS LAND AND MARTIN CORBETT

10 Of Philip K. Dick, reflexivity and shifting realities: organizing (writing) in our post-industrial society 160
   CHRISTIAN DE COCK

11 ‘I am a man, and nothing human is alien to me’: alienation and freakishness 177
   WARREN SMITH

PART IV
The gamesters of Triskelion* 191

12 ‘Repent Harlequin!’ said the Ticktockman: digesting science fiction 193
   MARTIN PARKER

13 Cyberpunk management 204
   ERIK PIÑEIRO

Index 215

* For the world is hollow and I have touched the sky, etc. are titles of episodes of Star Trek – The Original Series, 1966–9