Globalisation and the Critique of Political Economy
New insights from Marx’s writings

Lucia Pradella,
Contents

Acknowledgements  xvii
Abbreviations  xix

Introduction  1

1 Globalisation: not just a question of method  1
2 The new historical-critical edition of Marx's and Engels's writings  4
3 Between the concrete and the abstract  7

1 Globalisation: between economics and politics  13

1.1 Introduction  13
1.2 Money, state and world market: mercantilism  16
1.3 Labour, value and globalisation: classical political economy  21
1.4 Asiatic despotism, civil society and civilisation  33

2 Hegel, imperialism and world history  43

2.1 Introduction  43
2.2 Political economy in Hegel  45
2.3 Labour, alienation and civilisation  47
2.4 The dialectic of civil society  50
2.5 The 'ethical state'  53
2.6 State, market and world history  54
2.7 Conclusion  57

3 Marx's critique from the state to political economy  62

3.1 Introduction  62
3.2 The globalisation of freedom  65
Contents

3.3 At the sources of the critique of political economy 68
3.4 Marx's unfinished critique of Friedrich List 75
3.5 The foundations of historical materialism 78
3.6 World economic history 82
3.7 Capitalism, world market and revolution 85

4 The London Notebooks, 1850–3

4.1 Introduction 92
4.2 Rejecting the quantity theory of money (Notebooks 1–7) 94
4.3 Questioning Ricardo's system of political economy (Notebook 8) 99
4.4 Undermining the wage-fund theory (Notebooks 11 and 12) 101
4.5 Challenging Ricardo's theory of rent (Notebook 12) 104
4.6 Rejecting the theory of population (Notebook 13) 107
4.7 Colonialism and pre-capitalist societies (Notebook 14) 109
4.8 World history and the condition of women (Notebooks 19–21 and 24) 113
4.9 The Indian question (Notebooks 21–3) 115
4.10 Accumulation on a world scale and permanent revolution 119

5 Towards Capital

5.1 Introduction 126
5.2 Exploitation–nation–world: the draft on Bastiat and Carey 129
5.3 Grundrisse: capital in general 131
5.4 'Primitive accumulation' and the Asiatic mode of production 136
5.5 The international aspects of Marx's theory of money 142
5.6 The 1861–63 Manuscript: from capital in general to capital 145
5.7 Value theory, and uneven and combined development 148
5.8 Capital: from the abstract to the concrete 153

6 Conclusion

Appendix: Index of London Notebooks 175
Selected bibliography 184
Index 202