Asleep at the Switch

The Political Economy of Federal Research and Development Policy since 1960

BRUCE SMARDON

Carleton Library Series 228

McGill-Queen's University Press
Montreal & Kingston • London • Ithaca
Contents

Tables and Figure ix
Abbreviations xi
Acknowledgments xiii

Introduction: The Canadian Federal State and Domestic Technological Development 3

1 Promoting Domestic Technological Capacities: State Strategies and Social Antagonisms 29

PART ONE PERMUTATIONS OF DEPENDENT TECHNOLOGICAL DEVELOPMENT: FROM EARLY FORDISM TO NEOLIBERAL RESTRUCTURING

2 Entrenching Dependent Technological Development: Canadian Fordism in the Early Twentieth Century 51

3 Reasserting Dependent Technological Development: Canadian Fordism in the Postwar "Golden Age" 77

4 Another Form of Dependent Technological Development: Post-Fordist Accumulation in the Neoliberal Era 99

PART TWO PERMUTATIONS OF THE GLASSCO FRAMEWORK: PROMOTING R&D FROM DIEFENBAKER TO CHRÉTIEN

5 Beginning the Process: The Diefenbaker Tories and R&D Incentive Programs, 1957-63 135
6 Internal Struggles: Left-Liberals, the Glassco Framework, and R&D Policy, 1963–68 156
7 Further Contestation: The Gray Initiative, 1968–71 190
8 Limiting Change: Industrial Restructuring and Social Forces, 1971–73 215
9 Extending the Glassco Framework: R&D Policy in the 1970s 233
11 Moving to the Right: The Trudeau Liberals and R&D Incentive Programs, 1981–84 296
13 Final Episode: Transformative Strategies, the Glassco Framework, and the Chrétien Liberals, 1993–2000 333

Conclusion: The Impasse of the Federal State and Canadian Industrial R&D 359

Notes 391

Index 479