Contents

Author's note xiii

Part I

WESTERN MARITIME EMPIRES DIVIDE
THE WORLD INTO A RICH WESTERN WORLD
AND A POOR RESTERN WORLD

Chapter 1
Reasons for the rise of the Western world
in the centuries after 1500

1.1 Defining the Western world and the Restern world 3
1.2 The European and Christian Western world vs the non-European and (mostly) non-Christian Restern world 6
1.3 Reasons for the rise of Western Europe and its eco-cultural satellites 8
1.3.1 The rise of the West according to the Eurocentric school of thought 9
1.3.2 The rise of the West according to the American 'bonanza' school of thought 13
   (a) American precious metals and the rise of capitalism in Europe 14
   (b) The contribution of American plantations and African slaves towards Europe's industrialisation 18
1.3.3 The rise of the West according to the Eastern hemispheric school of thought 20
   (a) The Silk Roads and the superiority of Chinese civilisation until 1820 20
   (b) The Roman Empire, its Christianisation in the fourth century and the identity formation of Europe-as-Christendom after the rise of Islam 24
   (c) Islamisation and the globalisation of the Eastern hemisphere 32
   (d) The seaborne exchange between Western Europe and Asia (1500–1820) 34

Chapter 2
Power configurations and the periodisation of Western empires (1500–2010)

2.1 Power, hegemony, empires and colonialism: Formal and informal empires 43
2.2 The periodisation of the Western maritime empires 48
2.2.1 Three periods of deep systemic chaos (or three systemic powershifts) in the Western world since the fifteenth century 50
Chapter 3
Profiling Western maritime empires and understanding their unique characteristics

3.1 Eight unique characteristics of the Western maritime empires
3.2 Western maritime empires and their role as globalising empires
3.3 The plurality of European/Western power centres and the relentless competition between them
3.4 The monopolisation of state violence and Western atrocities in the Rest of the world
3.5 The asymmetrical global division of labour, the relentless exploitation of Restern labour, and the role of intermediaries and collaborators

Chapter 4
Western empires and the dynamics of social and imperial power over the past 500 years

4.1 Western empires and the role nation-states (mostly undemocratic) have played (and are still playing) in the formation of social and imperial power
4.2 Western empires and the role the military has played (and is still playing) in the formation of social (and/or imperial) power
4.3 Western empires and the dominant role capitalism has played since the mid-seventeenth century in the formation of social (and/or imperial) power
4.4 Western empires and the role ideologies have played (and are still playing) in the formation of social and imperial power
4.4.1 Ideologies used to justify imperialism in the first pattern of European empires (1530–1820)
4.4.2 Ideologies used to justify the second pattern of Western empires (1820–1950)
4.4.3 Ideologies used to justify the third pattern of American-led empires (1950–2010)

Chapter 5
Western industrialisation and the Great Divergence between the West and the Rest (1820–1950)

5.1 Different methods of measuring inequalities between and within countries
5.2 The emergence of moderate international inequalities during the first pattern of Western empires (1530–1820)
5.3 The West’s monopolisation of industrialisation during the second pattern of Western empires and the Great Divergence between the West and the Rest

5.4 The six stages in the history of industrialisation (1770–2010)

5.4.1 The first stage of industrialisation with Britain as the pioneer (1770–1820)

5.4.2 The second stage of industrialisation with Britain as the pioneer for the second time (1830–1870)

5.4.3 The third stage of industrialisation with Germany and the USA as the pioneers (1870/80–1914)

5.4.4 The fourth stage of industrialisation with the USA as the pioneer (1913–1950)

5.4.5 The fifth stage of industrialisation with the United States’ TNCs as the pioneers in the ‘re-industrialisation’ of Western Europe (1950–1980)

5.4.6 The sixth stage of industrialisation and ‘partnership’ industrialisation between United States’ TNCs and parts of the Western world since the early 1980s

Part II

THE FIRST PATTERN OF WESTERN EMPIRES:
EMPIRES OF PLUNDERERS, SLAVE TRADERS
AND SETTLEMENT COLONIALISTS
1530–1830

Chapter 6
The first period of deep systemic chaos: The Church in retreat, the yoke of feudalism breaks, two Europes

6.1 The late medieval period, the Renaissance and the transition to modernity

6.2 Dynastic wars, the Reformation and the first period of deep systemic chaos

6.3 The rise of capitalism in the Italian city-states

Chapter 7
The systemic period of the Iberian and the Catholic empires 1530–1630

7.1 The drift towards the West and towards the East

7.2 Portuguese crown-capitalism in the sixteenth century

7.3 The Spanish and the Catholic Church empires in the Americas and in the Philippines

7.4 The Genoese cycle of accumulation as the bankers of Spain
Chapter 8
The systemic period of the Dutch Empire 1648–1713
8.1 The spectacular rise of the Dutch and Amsterdam in the late sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries 212
8.2 The VOC and its monopolistic privileges (1602–1799) 218
8.3 The WIC and its monopolistic privileges (1621–1674) 222

Chapter 9
The systemic period of the first British Empire 1713–1883
9.1 England and its emerging empire from 1485 until 1688 228
9.2 The period of mild systemic chaos (1688–1713) and the emergence of Britain as a track-laying vehicle in empire building 234
9.3 Britain’s role as a ‘militaristic fiscal state’ and track-laying vehicle in empire building in the eighteenth century (1713–1783) 236
9.4 Britain’s transition from proto-industrialisation towards the first stage of industrialisation proper (1770–1820) 240
9.5 The (British) East India Company and the British Empire in India from 1600 until 1813 245

Part III
THE SECOND PATTERN OF WESTERN EMPIRES:
EMPIRES OF EXPLOITATION AND LABOUR REPRESSION (1820–1950)

Chapter 10
The second period of deep systemic chaos:
Revolutionary upheavals against the ancien régime (1775–1820)
10.1 Several revolutionary upheavals and an end to the original idea of empires (1775–1820) 261
10.2 The American War of Independence (1775–1783): The first wave of decolonisation 264
10.3 The Enlightenment and the revolutionary ideas of the eighteenth century 269
10.4 The French Revolution and the Napoleonic Wars (1789–1815) 272
10.5 Revolutionary upheavals in Latin America (1808–1825): The second wave of decolonisation 277
Chapter 11
The systemic period of the second British Empire
(1846–1914/31)

11.1 The second stage of industrialisation in Britain (1830–1870)
11.1.1 The British cotton industry in the nineteenth century
11.1.2 The British steam, iron and railway industries in the nineteenth century
11.2 A comparative advantage in violence: Britain's transport, communication and war-making revolutions in the mid-nineteenth century
11.3 Britain's transition from mercantilism to free-trade imperialism in the decades after the Napoleonic Wars (1815–1846)
11.4 The Victorian Golden Age of free-trade imperialism (1846–1873)
11.5 Inter-empire rivalry between Western countries and the decline of the British empire (1873–1914/31)

Chapter 12
The origins of the third world during the second pattern of Western empires (1820–1945)

12.1 The disruption and humiliation of the Western world during the second pattern of Western empires (1820–1945)
12.2 Informal colonial 'plundering' of Latin America by Britain and the USA after ±1830
12.3 The disruption and humiliation of India by Britain from 1813 until 1947
12.4 The violent intrusion into China during the second pattern of Western empires and the disintegration of the Chinese Empire (1830–1912)
12.5 The Dutch Empire in Indonesia and the exploitative nature of the 'cultivation system'
12.6 Extra-continental interventions in Africa and its degradation to the wretched stepchild of the world
12.6.1 Muslim and Christian slave trading in Africa and slavery in the Americas and Asia
12.6.2 Christianity, Western civilisation and racism as ideological justifications for European colonialism in Africa from the 1880s
12.6.3 The Scramble for Africa and the destructive nature of European imperialism in Africa (1885–1960/70)
Part IV

THE THIRD PATTERN OF WESTERN EMPIRES: THE PERNICIOUS DRAINING OF THE WESTERN WORLD BY MULTIPLE AMERICAN-LED EMPIRES AFTER THE SECOND WORLD WAR

Chapter 13
The third period of deep systemic chaos during the Thirty-One Years War (1914–1945)

13.1 The First World War, systemic chaos and the continuation and intensification of empire building 363
13.2 The Great Depression and the deepening of the period of systemic chaos 367
13.3 Ideological and military struggles over hostile politico-economic ‘models’ and imperial expansionism during the Thirty-One Years War 372
13.3.1 Democratic capitalism in Britain, France and the United States 375
13.3.2 Totalitarian military dictatorship and commandism in the USSR 378
13.3.3 Authoritarian fascism and state capitalism in Italy and Germany 382
13.4 The Second World War and the eruption of the Cold War between the USA and the USSR 387

Chapter 14
Anti-systemic revolts against Western empires and decolonisation in the twentieth century

14.1 The decolonisation of the second pattern of Western empires 399
14.2 Different stages of the revolt of Restern countries against the second pattern of Western empires 403
14.2.1 Elite and peasant resistance against the second pattern of Western empires before the First World War 403
14.2.2 The First World War and the revolt against the second pattern of industrialised Western empires 408
14.2.3 The Great Depression, Soviet industrialisation and the revolt against the West 411
14.2.4 The Second World War and decolonisation of Asian countries (1945–1950) 412
14.2.5 The developmental approach in Africa after the Second World War and the decolonisation of Africa during the Cold War (1957–1980) 418
Chapter 15
The multiple American post-colonial empires that inconspicuously disrupted, exploited and drained the Rest of the world after the Second World War

15.1 United States’ expansionism from the eighteenth until the twenty-first century

15.2 America’s first maritime empire from 1898 and its informal interventions in Latin America

15.3 The consolidation of the United States’ administrative, fiscal and financial powers in the eighty years after the Civil War to enable the USA to lead ‘invisible’ and ‘unique’ empires after the Second World War

15.4 The two American-led financial empires after the Second World War

15.4.1 The first American-led financial empire, when the United States was a credit country with a growing balance of payment deficit (1946–1971)

15.4.2 From the Nixon Shock to the Volcker Shock (1971–1979/82)

15.4.3 The second American-led financial empire, when the United States’ foreign debt escalated constantly

15.5 The two American-led capitalist/corporatist empires after the Second World War

15.5.1 The American-led social-democratic capitalist/corporatist empire in Western Europe (1945–1973)

15.5.2 The period of mild systemic chaos in the 1970s and the emergence of technological and financial globalisation (1968–1981)

15.5.3 The American-led post-colonial, neoliberal, global and capitalist/corporatist empire since the early 1980s

15.6 The American military empires since the Second World War

15.6.1 The first American-led military empire of ‘containment’ against the communist threat in Korea and in Vietnam

15.6.2 The American military crises of the 1970s

15.6.3 The second American-led military empire of ‘rollback’ during the Soviet War in Afghanistan (1979–1991)

(a) The Afghan War as the high point of the Cold War (1981–1991)

(b) The American-led empire of military bases, globalisation and ultimately of militarism

(c) American militarism and imperialism without international legitimacy

15.7 Serious fault lines in the structure of American-led empires

15.7.1 Fault lines in the American-led financial empire

15.7.2 Fault lines in the American-led neoliberal capitalist/corporatist empire

15.7.3 Fault lines in the American-led empire of militarism

15.8 Issues of reparative and distributive justice after 500 years of Western empire building
Part V

CAPITALISM AND GROWING DOMESTIC INEQUALITIES DURING THE PAST 500 YEARS

Chapter 16

Successive politico-economic systems and the almost uninterrupted dominance of 'capitalisms' over 'democracies' since 1500

16.1 Five successive politico-economic systems in the British-American world and five versions of capitalism (1455–2010) 519

16.2 Royal absolutism and the emergence of proto-capitalism in England (1485–1688) 522

16.2.1 The Gentry Parliament and the emergence of capitalism proper (1688–1832) 523

16.2.2 The bourgeois parliaments, the triumph of the industrial and financial elite and the bourgeois version of capitalism (1832–1945) 525

16.2.3 Democratic capitalism and the de-democratisation of capitalism in two successive politico-economic systems after the Great Depression (1933–1973 and 1973–2013) 528

(a) The social-democratic regime during the period of democratic capitalism (1933–1973) 530

(b) The neoliberal regime, de-democratisation and 'undemocratic' capitalism (±1981–±2010) 533

16.3 Undemocratic capitalism and the unequal distribution of domestic property 541

16.4 Undemocratic capitalism, the malfunctioning of the market mechanism and growing domestic inequality 544