The Viennese Students of Civilization

The Meaning and Context of Austrian Economics Reconsidered

ERWIN DEKKER
Erasmus University, Rotterdam, The Netherlands
Contents

Acknowledgments

1 Introduction

1 Late visitors to Pompeii
2 Civilization?
3 Why civilization?
4 Interpreting the Viennese or the Austrians
5 The conversations about Hayek
6 Economic knowledge and knowledge about civilization

2 Cultivating economic knowledge
The student of civilization in Paradies
1 Wiener Kreise, in plural
2 Between coffeehouse and university
3 The rituals of the Kreise
4 Conversation as scholarly practice

3 Trapped between ignorance, customs and social forces
The individual in the tradition of the Viennese students of civilization
1 Emancipating the individual
2 Liberal hopes
3 Liberal frustrations
4 Social forces and elites
5 Civilization and restraint

4 The market: civilizing or disciplinary force?
On the role of markets in the civilizing process
1 Socialism and the social engineers
2 The return of natural instincts
3 Markets and the civilizing process 76
4 A price worth paying 81
5 Conclusion – discipline and civilization 87

5 Instincts, civilization and communities
The conversation about the individual and civilization continued 91
1 Taming the instincts? 92
2 Sources of civilization 99
3 A shared culture 103

6 Therapeutic nihilism or the humility of the student
On the limitations of the student of the civilization 109
1 Therapeutic nihilism in medicine 112
2 Therapeutic nihilism as a cultural phenomenon 115
3 Therapeutic nihilism among the Viennese students of civilization 119
4 The limits of economic knowledge 124
5 Conclusion – acceptance and courage 128

7 The student as defender of civilization
Or Scipio’s tears and the fate of a civilization 131
1 Broch and the power of literature 134
2 Defeatism? 136
3 The flaws of historicism 138
4 The need for a defense 141
5 Renewed ideals? 145
6 Conclusion—fate and civilization 150

8 The student of civilization and his culture
On the relationship between the scholar and his object of study 153
1 Therapeutic and edifying knowledge 155
2 The responsibility of the social scientist 159
3 On the humility of the Viennese students of civilization 164

9 Meaning lost, meaning found
The migration and initial reception of the Viennese students of civilization in the United States 168
1 Social science in America 171
2 Depoliticization and repoliticization: a political and an economic legacy 176
3 Individual trajectories 180