Japan's Development Assistance

Foreign Aid and the Post-2015 Agenda

Edited by

Hiroshi Kato
Vice President, Japan International Cooperation Agency, Japan

John Page
Senior Fellow, Brookings Institution, USA

Yasutami Shimomura
Professor Emeritus, Hosei University, Japan
Contents

List of Tables, Figures, and Boxes xv
Foreword xvii
Preface and Acknowledgments xix
Notes on Contributors xxi
List of Abbreviations xxviii

1 Japan's ODA 1954–2014: Changes and Continuities in a Central Instrument in Japan's Foreign Policy 1
Hiroshi Kato

1.1 Introduction 1
1.2 Chronological review 1
  1.2.1 The 1950s: Era of war reparations and economic recovery 1
  1.2.2 The 1960s: ODA expanded as a means of economic growth 2
  1.2.3 The 1970s: ODA policy changes in the wake of various shocks 2
  1.2.4 The 1980s: Road to the top—Further expansion of ODA 3
  1.2.5 The 1990s: Fulfilling responsibility as the top ODA donor 3
  1.2.6 The 2000s: The period of soul-searching 4
  1.2.7 The 2010s: Toward the reinvention of ODA 5
1.3 Characteristics of Japan's ODA 6
  1.3.1 Decentralized systems and responsibilities for ODA policymaking and implementation 6
  1.3.2 Extensive use of loans 7
  1.3.3 Request-based principle 7
  1.3.4 Asia-centered 8
  1.3.5 Emphasis on economic infrastructure 8
  1.3.6 Poverty reduction versus economic take-off 10
  1.3.7 Emphasis on human resource development and field orientation 11
  1.3.8 Broad-based support for implementation 12
1.4 Examples of landmark projects 14
1.5 Conclusion 15
2 Japan's Engagement with Multilateral Development Banks:
Do Their Professional Paths Really Cross?
Kiyoshi Kodera

2.1 Japan’s historical contribution to MDBs
2.2 Japan and MDBs: Chronicle
2.2.1 1950s, 1960s, and 1970s: From large borrower to important donor to the MDBs
2.2.2 1980s: Further strengthening of Japan’s financial role
2.2.3 1990s: Addressing new challenges
2.2.4 2000s: A period of retrenchment
2.3 Reflection on Japan’s engagement with MDBs
2.3.1 Has Japan made good use of MDBs for its ODA policy?
2.3.2 Did Japan consciously integrate the MDB dimension into its overall ODA framework and strategy?
2.3.3 How will Japan deal with the changing dynamics of the international aid architecture and future MDBs governance as a major and responsible shareholder?
2.3.4 Final words: Beyond financial contributions

Part I Origin and Institutional Foundation of Japan’s Bilateral ODA

3 Origins of Japanese Aid Policy—Post-war Reconstruction, Reparations, and World Bank Projects
Ryo Fujikura and Mikiyasu Nakayama

3.1 Introduction
3.2 Experience during the post-war era
3.3 Priority production system: An attempt at self-help
3.4 War reparations
3.4.1 The norm at dawn of Japanese foreign aid
3.4.2 Prioritizing infrastructure
3.4.3 Prioritizing the Asian region
3.5 World Bank loans
3.5.1 Introduction of foreign capital
3.5.2 Modern financial affairs learned by the World Bank
3.5.3 Modern concept of the consulting firm introduced by the World Bank
3.5.4 Effects on Japanese domestic policies
3.6 Discussion

4 Japan’s Foreign Aid: Institutional Change and Shifting Policy Directions
Purnendra Jain

4.1 Aid administration and institutional changes
4.2 Policy changes
4.2.1 ODA Charters 62
4.2.2 Geographic shift 63
4.2.3 Northeast Asia: China 64
4.2.4 India and Southeast Asia 65
4.3 Future directions 67
4.4 Assessment and conclusion 68

5 The Political Economy of Japan's Aid Policy Trajectory: With Particular Reference to the Changes and Continuity under the ODA Charter
Yasutami Shimomura

5.1 Introduction 72
5.1.1 Objective 72
5.1.2 Analytical framework 73
5.2 The political economy of the evolution of the ODA Charter 74
5.2.1 Convergence with the mainstream 74
5.2.2 Advocating Japan's own thinking 76
5.3 The political economy of the revision in 2003 79
5.3.1 Aid policy in an adverse wind 79
5.3.2 Three major domestic stakeholders 80
5.3.3 The revised charter: An attempt of soft landing 81
5.4 Changes and continuity under the ODA Charter 81
5.4.1 The rise and fall of "negative linkage" 81
5.4.2 Stable geographical and sectoral distribution 83
5.5 Opportunities and challenges 84

6 The Benefits of Unification Failure: Re-examining the Evolution of Economic Cooperation in Japan
Jin Sato

6.1 Degree of centralization 88
6.2 Literature review 89
6.3 Unrealized demands of administrative unity 91
6.3.1 Pressures from the business community 92
6.3.2 Initiatives within the government 93
6.4 Discussion: The benefits of a multi-centric system 94
6.5 Conclusion and implications 98

Part II Japan, Asia, and Africa: Adapting Aid to Changing Contexts

7 The East Asian Miracle and Development Policy: A Twenty-Year Retrospective
John Page

7.1 Introduction 105
7.2 States, markets, and the Miracle 106
7.2.1 The Miracle and the Washington Consensus 106
7.2.2 Economic growth in the 1990s and the Growth Commission 108
7.3 The debate over Asia's growth 109
7.4 How durable were the policy lessons? 109
7.4.1 Getting the fundamentals right 110
7.4.2 The role of manufactured exports 111
7.4.3 Industrial policy 112
7.5 The Miracle and the donors: Did anyone listen? 113
7.5.1 Misplaced goals: Education and infrastructure 113
7.5.2 National ownership of development strategy 114
7.5.3 Flexibility and experimentation 115
7.6 Conclusions 115

8 Japan, Korea, and China: Styles of ODA in East Asia 120
Barbara Stallings and Eun Mee Kim
8.1 Literature on East Asian foreign aid 121
8.2 Asian versus Western donors: A look at the data 122
8.3 Asian donors to non-Asian countries 127
8.4 Explaining similarities 128
8.5 Conclusions: Rivals or partners? 130

9 Policies and Practices of China's Foreign Aid: A Comparison with Japan 135
Meibo Huang
9.1 The differences between China's and Japan's foreign aid policies 135
9.1.1 Aid motivation and principles 135
9.1.2 Scale and channels of foreign aid 137
9.1.3 Regional and country allocations 139
9.2 Similarities between Chinese and Japanese foreign aid practices 141
9.2.1 Aid philosophies: Emphasis on building recipients' self-help capacity 141
9.2.2 Assistance schemes: Dominance of loans 142
9.2.3 Sector distribution: Emphasis on economic infrastructure and production sectors, and project-based aid 143
9.3 Conclusions: Chinese international responsibility and its integration into the international development system 144
9.3.1 International responsibility 145
9.3.2 Foreign aid policy and practices 146
10 Japan’s Official Development Assistance to Sub-Saharan Africa: Patterns, Dynamics, and Lessons
Scarlett Cornelissen

10.1 Introduction 149
10.2 The early phases of Japan’s ODA to sub-Saharan Africa: 1970s and 1980s 151
10.3 Japan’s Africa ODA over the past 20 years 154
   10.3.1 The TICAD process—The first two conferences 155
   10.3.2 Evolving dynamics—The latter phases of TICAD 157
10.4 Looking back, looking ahead 160
10.5 Conclusion 162

Part III Instruments and Footprints

11 Catalyzing Transformation for Inclusive Growth
Akio Hosono

11.1 Introduction 169
11.2 Analytical perspective 169
   11.2.1 Overview and key issues 169
   11.2.2 Aid and economic transformation 171
   11.2.3 Transformation for jobs and inclusive growth 171
   11.2.4 Aid and transformation for jobs and inclusive growth: Japan’s view 173
11.3 Outstanding cases of economic transformation for jobs and inclusive growth 174
   11.3.1 Case 1: Prodigious development of Thailand’s automobile industry: Becoming the largest hub of automobile export in ASEAN with a competitive supporting industry 174
   11.3.2 Case 2: The Bangladeshi garment industry: Becoming one of the world’s biggest exporters of ready-made garments 176
   11.3.3 Case 3: Tanzania’s rice production: Achieving self-sufficiency of rice, the second most important staple crop, with high demand–supply gap in sub-Saharan Africa 178
   11.3.4 Case 4: Diversification through agroforestry in arid and semi-arid Kenya 180
   11.3.5 Case 5: Cerrado agriculture with inclusive and sustainable growth: Transforming a vast barren area into one of the most productive agricultural regions in the world 181
   11.3.6 Case 6: Chile’s aquaculture of salmon and shellfish: Becoming a global exporter from scratch 182
11.4 Concluding remarks 183
12 Revisiting Policy-Based Financing: Experiences of Japan, Asia, and Other Countries, and Their Relevance to the Post-2015 Development Agenda

Kazuto Tsuji

12.1 Introduction 188
12.2 PBF in Japan 189
  12.2.1 Post-war history of Japan’s PBF 189
  12.2.2 Success factors of JDB’s PBF 189
  12.2.3 Present challenges of DBJ’s PBF 191
12.3 PBF in Asia and other countries 191
  12.3.1 PBF supported by Japan’s ODA 191
  12.3.2 Other PBF 196
12.4 The success and failure of the past PBF 197
  12.4.1 Criteria for success 197
  12.4.2 Lessons learned from the experiences of PBF in Asia and other countries 198
12.5 Transformation of ODA’s role in development 199
12.6 The renewed role of PBF and the renewed role of ODA to assist it 201
  12.6.1 The renewed role of PBF: Concrete measures and risks 201
  12.6.2 The renewed role of ODA to assist PBF: Risk mitigation 202
12.7 Conclusion 202

13 Embracing Human Security: New Directions of Japan’s ODA for the 21st Century

Sachiko G. Kamidohzono, Oscar A. Gómez, and Yoichi Mine

13.1 Introduction 205
13.2 Japan’s embracement of the idea of human security 206
  13.2.1 The idea of human security 206
  13.2.2 Human security and Japan’s ODA 207
13.3 ODA and JICA’s human security practice: A brief history 208
  13.3.1 Natural disasters 209
  13.3.2 Climate change 211
  13.3.3 Infectious diseases 212
  13.3.4 Violent conflict 214
13.4 Stepping forward to realize human security 215
  13.4.1 Emphasizing prevention 215
  13.4.2 Realizing seamless assistance 216
  13.4.3 Caring for the most vulnerable 217
13.5 Conclusion 219

14 Japan Overseas Cooperation Volunteers: Its Genesis and Development

Yasunobu Okabe

14.1 Introduction 222
14.2 Why JOCV matters 223
14.2.1 Questions about JOCV 223
14.2.2 Literature and analytical framework 224
14.3 International factors 225
14.3.1 The Cold War and Japan–US relations 226
14.3.2 Pressure from the United States in the Puerto Rico conference 227
14.4 Domestic social factors 228
14.5 Agential factors and the political process 229
14.5.1 Youth association leaders and young members of the LDP 229
14.5.2 Policymaking: LDP and MOFA 231
14.6 Long-term institutional development 233
14.7 Conclusion 234

Part IV Japan and the Multilateral Institutions

15 Japan and the United Nations: Its Past, Present, and Future 239
Stikehiro Hasegawa

15.1 Failing of charity diplomacy or unfailing strategic use of aid resources 240
15.1.1 Conundrum of Japan's assessed contributions to the United Nations 240
15.1.2 Implications of strategic distribution of “noncore” voluntary contributions 241
15.1.3 The United Nations as an instrument of Japanese foreign policy 242
15.2 Neorealist shift in Japan's aid policy and adoption of peacekeeping cooperation 244
15.2.1 Juxtaposition of the United Nations and Japanese principles of self-restraint 244
15.2.2 Embryogenesis of Japanese staff 246
15.2.3 UN Security Council reform and contributing criteria for permanent membership 247
15.3 In quest of a constructivist approach 248
15.3.1 Human security and quest of ownership 248
15.3.2 Peacebuilding and leadership role in launching UN mechanism 250
15.3.3 TICAD and sharing of ownership 251
15.4 Future imperatives in the Japan–United Nations relationship 252

16 The World Bank and Japan 255
Yoshiaki Abe and Shigeo Katsu

16.1.1 Introduction 255
16.1.2 Applying for membership and becoming a member 255
16.1.3 Economic reports and lending operations 256
16.1.4 Initial period: 1953–1957 256
16.1.6 Third period: 1963–1966 258
16.1.7 Section summary 259

16.2 Part II: A fully engaged Japan 260
16.2.1 Japan as number two 260
16.2.2 From tension to miracle 261
16.2.3 One more stand 262

16.3 Part III: Drifting apart 263
16.4.1 Interview findings 265
16.4.2 Some suggestions for the way forward 266

17 OECD-DAC and Japan: Its Past, Present, and Future 276
Richard Manning

17.1 Summary 276
17.2 Origins 276
17.3 The dialogue between Japan and its Western partners, 1960–2001 278
17.3.1 The early years (1961–1979) 279
17.3.2 The rise of Japan and its implications (1980–1989) 281
17.3.3 Paradoxes (1990–2001) 283
17.3.4 The challenges of a new century (2001–2014) 288

Part V Quo Vadis: The East Asian ODA Model and the Post-2015 Development Agenda

18 Lessons for Japanese Foreign Aid from Research on Aid’s Impact 295
Tony Addison and Finn Tarp

18.1 Introduction 295
18.2 What has aid achieved? 296
18.3 What can aid do next? Structural transformation as a challenge 298
18.4 Infrastructure for structural transformation 300
18.5 Final observations and conclusions 303

19 New Actors, New Instruments, New Priorities: Toward a Sustainable Development Transformation 310
Homi Kharas and Julie Biau

19.1 Introduction 310
19.2 The changing global context for development 311
19.3 The post-2015 debate 314
19.4 Universality and consensus building in post-2015 317
19.5 Financing the post-2015 agenda
19.6 Transparency, accountability, and burden sharing
19.7 Japan and the future of international cooperation

20 NGOs and Japan's ODA: Critical Views and Advocacy
Masaaki Ohashi

20.1 Introduction
20.2 Beginning of ODA advocacy by NGOs in the 1980s
  20.2.1 PARC's "no aid"
  20.2.2 First organized advocacy by REAL
  20.2.3 REAL's descendants
20.3 The peak of ODA criticism during the 1990s
  20.3.1 Calls for ODA fundamental law
  20.3.2 Formation of ODA Charter and questions about its applications
  20.3.3 Criticisms and counter-arguments in publications of the 1990s
  20.3.4 The first successful ODA advocacy by an NGO implementing projects
20.4 NGOs' resonance with global advocacy and international development frames from the 1990s
  20.4.1 Jubilee 2000
  20.4.2 Global Call to Action against Poverty
  20.4.3 Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness and Global Partnership for Effective Development Cooperation
20.5 Advocacy for the recent ODA implementation of system reforms
  20.5.1 Creation of JBIC
  20.5.2 Creation of new JICA
  20.5.3 Creation of guidelines for confirmation of environmental and social considerations
20.6 Other major advocacy toward Japan's ODA in recent years
  20.6.1 Periodic dialogues with MOFA, JICA, and others
  20.6.2 Japan Platform
  20.6.3 Revisions of the ODA Charter
20.7 Conclusion

21 Japan's Foreign Assistance at 60: Reflecting on the Past and Looking to the Future
Hiroshi Kato, John Page, and Yasutami Shimomura

21.1 Introduction
21.2 Japan's evolving approach to foreign assistance
Contents

21.3 Some lessons of experience 348
21.4 Adapting to the changing aid environment 350
21.5 Japan and the post-2015 agenda 353
21.6 Conclusions 355

Index 358