The Mismeasure of Wealth

Essays on Marx and Social Form

By

Patrick Murray
Contents

Preface ix
Acknowledgements XII
Notes on Chapters XVI

Introduction: Putting the Spotlight on Social Form and Purpose 1

PART 1
The Essays

1 Value, Money and Capital in Hegel and Marx 55

2 Redoubled Empiricism: The Place of Social Form and Formal Causality in Marxian Theory 69

3 Things Fall Apart: Historical and Systematic Dialectics and the Critique of Political Economy 95

4 Marx's 'Truly Social' Labour Theory of Value: Part 1, Abstract Labour in Marxian Value Theory 120

5 Marx's 'Truly Social' Labour Theory of Value: Part 11, How is Labour That is under the Sway of Capital Actually Abstract? 156

6 The Grammar of Value: A Close Look at Marx's Critique of Samuel Bailey 189

7 Unavoidable Crises: Reflections on Backhaus and the Development of Marx's Value-Form Theory in the Grundrisse 220

8 The Necessity of Money: How Hegel Helped Marx Surpass Ricardo's Theory of Value 249

9 Money as Displaced Social Form: Why Value Cannot be Independent of Price 277
CONTENTS

10 The Social and Material Transformation of Production by Capital: Formal and Real Subsumption in Capital, Volume 1 294

11 The Place of 'The Results of the Immediate Production Process' in Capital 325

12 Beyond the 'Commerce and Industry' Picture of Capital 341

13 The Secret of Capital's Self-Valorisation 'Laid Bare': How Hegel Helped Marx to Overturn Ricardo's Theory of Profit 373

14 The Illusion of the Economic: The Trinity Formula and the 'Religion of Everyday Life' 398

PART 2

Critical Engagements

15 Avoiding Bad Abstractions: A Defence of Co-constitutive Value-Form Theory 425

16 The New Giant's Staircase 443

17 In Defence of the 'Third Thing Argument': A Reply to James Furner's 'Marx's Critique of Samuel Bailey' 465

18 Reply to Geert Reuten 485

19 The Trouble with Ricardian Marxism: Comments on 'The Four Drafts of Capital: Towards a New Interpretation of the Dialectical Thought of Marx', by Enrique Dussel 505

Bibliography 517
Index 536