CONTENTS

Acknowledgments vii
About the Editors and Authors viii

Part I
Background material 1

1 Introduction 3
  Yaniv Hanoch, Andrew J. Barnes, and Thomas Rice

2 A brief overview of behavioral economics 14
  Thomas Rice, Yaniv Hanoch, and Andrew J. Barnes

Part II
Shaping health behaviors 31

3 The behavioral economics of tobacco products: innovations in laboratory methods to inform regulatory science 33
  Warren K. Bickel, Lara N. Moody, Sarah E. Snider, Alexandra M. Mellis, Jeffrey S. Stein, and Amanda J. Quisenberry

4 Understanding alcohol and other drug use via behavioral economics: review and clinical applications 51
  Michael Amlung, Joshua Gray, and James MacKillop
5 Behavioral economics: tools for promotion of physical activity 70
   Tammy Leonard and Kerem Shuval

6 Using behavioral economics to improve dietary intake: alternatives to regulation, bans, and taxation 90
   Marie A. Bragg and Brian Elbel

Part III
Detecting and managing disease 107

7 Improving medication adherence with behavioral economics 109
   Steven E. Meredith and Nancy M. Petry

8 Integrating principles from behavioral economics into patient navigation programs targeting cancer screening 127
   Yan Li, Fernando A. Wilson, Roberto Villarreal, and José A. Pagán

9 Behavioral economics and HIV: a review of existing studies and potential future research areas 141
   Sebastian Linnemayr

10 Behavioral economics and health behaviors among the poor: findings from developing country populations 157
   Jill Luoto

Part IV
The role of providers, insurers, and government 173

11 Applications of behavioral economics to clinical quality improvement 175
   Daniella Meeker and Jason N. Doctor

12 Using behavioral economics to improve people’s decisions about purchasing health insurance 193
   Andrew J. Barnes, Thomas Rice, and Yaniv Hanoch

13 The role of government: how behavioral economics can inform policies to improve health behaviors 211
   Aditi P. Sen and Richard G. Frank

Index 231