Political Economy as Natural Theology
Smith, Malthus and Their Followers

Paul Oslington
Contents

Preface vii

1 Introduction 1

2 Natural theology: philosophical and historical issues 4
   Introduction 4
   Natural theology and scripture 4
   Varieties of natural theology 5
   The British tradition of scientific natural theology 6
   Natural theology, creation and providence 7
   Natural theology and theodicy 9
   Conclusion 10

3 Early English theological roots of political economy 13
   Introduction 13
   Joseph Butler (1692–1752) 15
   Josiah Tucker (1713–99) 18
   William Paley (1743–1805) 20
   Edmund Burke (1729–97) 23
   Conclusion 26

4 Adam Smith as natural theologian 30
   Introduction 30
   Adam Smith's religious background 30
   Adam Smith's invisible hand 37
   Adam Smith's theodicy 45
   The future hope, nature and justice in Smith's system 49
   Conclusion 55
Contents

5 Natural theology and the emergence of political economy: Stewart, Malthus, Sumner and Chalmers

Introduction 60
Further Scottish background: Dugald Stewart 61
Malthus' Principle of Population and its theodicy 62
Development of Malthus' theodicy by JB Sumner 66
Malthus' Scottish disciple Thomas Chalmers 69
Conclusion 76

6 Progress and tension: Richard Whately and William Whewell

Introduction 80
Political economy at Oxford: Nassau Senior and responses by Richard Whately and JH Newman 81
Richard Whately 88
Political economy at Cambridge: Richard Jones and William Whewell 90
Conclusion 102

7 The demise of natural theology and separation of economics from theology

Introduction 108
Explaining the separation of economics from theology 108
Explaining the demise of natural theology 110
The demise of natural theology as the separation of economics from theology 112
Evolution as a lost opportunity to renew natural theology 114
Subsequent developments in Britain, continental Europe and North America 117
Conclusion 123

8 Reflections on the contemporary relationship between economics and theology

Introduction 127
What can we learn from this episode about what promotes fruitful and unfruitful exchange between economists and theologians? 127
Frameworks for contemporary engagement 128

Appendix: analysis of key terms in English books 130
Bibliography 134
Index 162