

List of illustrations	p. ix
Acknowledgements	p. xi
Introduction	p. 1
From locus classicus to cosmopolitan picnic site	p. 11
The disturbing discovery of Herculaneum and Pompeii	p. 15
The classical and empirical on Etna	p. 21
Curiosity and katabasis	p. 25
Gothic picnics on the volcano: Winckelmann and Sade	p. 29
Tourist picnics on Vesuvius	p. 32
From picnic sites to the land of cockaigne	p. 39
Incommensurability and measure	p. 45
Two modern 'Plinies' and the empirical turn	p. 51
On the influence of Kircher and chemistry	p. 52
Volcanological theories based on seawaters and electricity	p. 60
The basalt controversy and the empirical turn	p. 70
Volcanological networks and rival schools of thought	p. 77
On the volcanic sublime, its art and artifice	p. 87
Eighteenth-century theories of the sublime: Burke and Kant	p. 90
The Alpine sublime and the volcanic sublime	p. 96
The volcano as tableau	p. 98
The sublime volcano in art	p. 102
Artificial volcanoes	p. 110
The uncanny fascination with lava	p. 113
Industrial volcanoes	p. 116
From the sublime spectacle to the sublime spectator	p. 120
More heat than light? Natural philosophies of volcanism	p. 127
An anti-clerical volcano	p. 132
The volcano of popular passions	p. 138
The volcano as a source of enlightenment	p. 143
Prometheus versus Empedocles	p. 151
A volcanology of revolution 1789-1794	p. 159
Staging the volcano of revolution	p. 167
The volcano and the Terror	p. 175
June 1794: Vesuvius and the Terror	p. 186
Volcanic Iceland: conquering Hekla and surviving Laki	p. 197
Banks on Staffa and Hekla	p. 205
The deadliest volcano: Laki 1783	p. 213
Lived experiences of the Laki eruption and its effects 1783-1784	p. 218
Eighteenth-century explanations for volcanogenic weather	p. 227
Conclusion	p. 233
Bibliography	p. 239

