

History and Cultural Memory in Neo-Victorian Fiction

Victorian Afterimages

Kate Mitchell

Lecturer in English Literature, Australian National University, Australia

acrr, lan

Contents

Acknowledgements	viii
Introduction: i told you we'd been invaded by Victoriana'	1
1 Memory Texts: History, Fiction and the Historical Imaginary	12
2 Contemporary Victorian(ism)s	39
3 A Fertile Excess: Waterland , Desire and the Historical Sublime	63
4 (Dis)Possessing Knowledge: A. S. Byatt's Possession : A Romance	93
5 'Making it seem like it's authentic': the Faux-Victorian Novel as Cultural Memory in Affinity and Fingersmith	117
6 'The alluring patina of loss': Photography, Memory, and Memory Texts in Sixty Lights and Afterimage	143
Conclusion: 'What will count as history?'	177
Notes	184
Select Bibliography	195
Index	215