

Contents

List of abbreviations	ix
List of tables	xi
Introduction	xiii
1 Cultural relativism, Eurocentrism and Marx's Asiatic mode of production	1
Perception of differences and Eurocentrism	1
The Asiatic mode of production	7
Marxist theoretical blind alleys	17
The evolution of environmental theory	30
2 The anti-imperialist reaction and the Marxist pre-emption of economic-imperialism theory	35
Colonialism and social imperialism	35
J. A. Hobson, the patterns of colonialism and the debate over economic imperialism	36
Marxist theories of imperialism	52
The Comintern phase of Marxist economic-imperialism theory	67
The humane face of Eurocentrism and the progress of the West	76
3 Policies and politics in the struggle for the Third World	78
Economic development and world history	78
The 'birth' of underdevelopment	80
Pre-1945 theoretical work on economic development	82
The historical context for the growth of development studies	89
The history of development studies	98

The 'mainstream' phase	103
Modernization theory, or: a controversial expansion of development studies	114
The W. W. Rostow synthesis and its critics	118
The balance to 1960	121
Development economics in the 1960s	136
4 The Marxist response to Western developmentalism	139
Introduction	139
The theoretical shortcomings of the Marxist view of the Third World	143
Baran's long-view of underdevelopment	154
The historical context of radicalism	162
A controversial revision of dependency ideas	168
A. G. Frank	178
The definition of dependency	196
Third World contributions to economic- imperialism theory	201
Western syntheses on economic-imperialism theory	216
I. Wallerstein's dependency summation	219
5 The overthrow of the orthodoxies and the progress of the West	235
The onset of disillusion in development studies	235
Alternative methods and approaches	238
The dependency debates	244
The general critique of dependency	253
The laissez-faire and the Marxist reactions	263
The historical progress of Europe	270
Conclusions	278
Notes	281
Further Reading	306
Index	309