PART I GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS	1
1 Why Quality Matters	2
Denzin's alternative	4
Conclusion	7
2 Postscientific Critiques	9
Political perspectives	9
Multiple voices	13
Conclusion	17
3 Trust, Truth and Philosophy	19
Positive science	21
Knowing a real world	23
Constructing a research community	29
Conclusion	30
4 Guiding Ideals	32
Positivist criteria	34
Measurement validity	34
Internal validity	38
Causality in qualitative research	39
External validity	40
Reliability and replicability	41
Interpretivist criteriology	42
Constructivist 'criteria'	45
Permissive criteria	47
Conclusion	49
PART II RESEARCH PRACTICE	51
5 Converging on a Point?	52
Triangulation	53
Criticisms of triangulation	56

vi THE QUALITY OF QUALITATIVE RESEARCH

The ethnomethodological critique	57
The philosophical critique	59
Member validation	61
Examples of member validation	65
Psychiatric emergency teams	65
Surgeons' decision making	66
The annihilation of place: member validation as rhetoric	68
Member validation and discourse analysis	69
Conversation analysis as self-validating	70
Conclusion	71
6 Accounting for Contradiction	73
Searching and accounting for negative instances	74
Studies lacking negative instances	75
'Hearing' talk as a negative instance	75
Adding to textual analysis	76
Studies that account for negative instances	78
Deviant cases give additional support	78
Deviant cases lead to modification of ideas	80
Deviant cases are explainable	81
Analytic induction	83
Description of the method with examples	83
Criticisms and limitations	85
Conclusion	85
7 Grounding Theory	87
Grounding theoretical statements	88
The discovery of grounded theory	91
Theoretical sampling and theoretical saturation	92
Thick description and theoretical saturation	94
The historical context	95
Constant comparison	96
Staying on the ground	97
Later development of grounded theory	99
Quantitative data	100
Limitations and criticisms of grounded theory	102
Critique from postmodernism	103
Conclusion	104
8 Generalizing from Qualitative Research	106
Naturalism and thick description	107
Theoretical generalization	109
Using numbers to generalize	113
Combining survey with case study: an example	113
Sampling within the case	115
Conclusion	118

9	Using Numbers	119
	Counting the countable: an example	121
	Other uses of numbers	123
	Quantitative research facilitates qualitative research	123
	Combination of the two to produce a general picture	124
	Structure and process	126
	Researchers' and subjects' perspectives	127
	Simple counts	128
	Counting to mislead	130
	Counting interactions	132
	Facilitating the interpretation of relations between variables	133
	Measuring meaning	133
	Advanced statistics and qualitative method	136
	Truth tables and Qualitative Comparison Analysis (QCA)	136
	Conclusion	138
10	Reliability and Replicability	140
	External reliability	141
	Replication	142
	Mead and Freeman on Samoa	142
	Other replications	144
	The constructivist critique: Street Corner Society	145
	Internal reliability	147
	Low-inference descriptors	148
	'Recording' fieldnotes	149
	'Constructing' fieldnotes	150
	Transcription in conversation analysis	151
	Reliability of coding	154
	Using computers	154
	Showing data	156
	Conclusion	157
11	Reflexivity and Writing	159
	Confession versus reflexive accounting	160
	A non-fallibilistic example	161
	Explaining methods	162
	Making theories explicit	163
	Deciphering a confessional tale: investigating health beliefs	165
	Postmodern reflexivity	169
	Examples of textual radicalism	170
	Methodological angst	170
	Removing the author's voice: examples from Moroccan ethnography	172
	Poetic and fictional forms	174
	Conclusion	177

12 Reinstating the Author	178
Reporting the American city	179
The art of the hustler	179
A night in a shooting gallery	180
Aesthetics	183
Humour in Goffman	185
Summary and conclusion	187
