

Contents

Acknowledgments	page	ix
Introduction: criminal policy as cultural history	1
Interpreting criminal policy	1
From willfulness to wreckage	10
1 The origins of Victorianism: impulse and moralization	14
The rise of the problem of criminality	14
The specter of savagery	26
Domesticating the passions: the discourse of character	38
2 Victorian criminal policy I: reforming the law	46
From acts to character: new conceptions of crime, new tasks for criminal policy	46
Expanding the reach of the criminal law	49
Building character through the law	52
Containing the specter of irresistible impulse	83
3 Victorian criminal policy II: reformed punishment	92
Dangerous punishment: against lotteries and spectacles	92
A new language of punishment: reading the Victorian penal system	101
Dealing with special cases	122
Punishment and Victorian liberalism	141
4 A changing human image	159
The mysterious citadel of the will	159
“A shallow, feeble, and vague abstraction”	174
5 Late Victorian social policy – a changing context	185
Social policy and will power	186
The drunkard becomes a patient	188
Treatment for the pauper	190
Education as welfare	197
Civil law: character building ebbs	201

6	The de-moralizing of criminality	215
	The professionals take over	215
	Criminals as “manufactured articles”	224
	The criminal within respectability	244
7	Prosecution and sentencing: the erosion of moral discourse	257
	The “administratization” of criminal law	257
	The consequences of success	258
	Extending the reach of criminal law	259
	Killing and responsibility	266
	Theft	279
	Juvenile offenders	285
	Habitual drunkards	294
	Habitual criminals	300
	A “crisis in criminal law”?	306
8	Disillusion with the prison	308
	Out of uniformity, multiplicity: the discovery of exceptions to normal prison discipline	308
	“A huge punishing machine”: the discrediting of the normal penal regime	321
9	The outcome: social debility and positive punishment	337
	From moralism to causalism	337
	The nature of criminals	342
	New modes of dealing with criminals	366
	Index	382