

Contents

List of abbreviations	9
1 Introduction	11
2 Post-development	21
2.1 Critiques of development	21
2.2. A sceptical post-development stance	25
2.3 Local embedding of international discourse	27
3 The international and transnational anti-corruption campaign (INTACD)	30
3.1 Conceptions of corruption based on modernisation theory	35
3.2 Rational-legal authority and the public-private divide	37
3.3 Economic conceptualisation of corruption	39
3.4 Critiques of the INTACD	43
3.4.1 INTACD-compatible critiques	44
3.4.2 Fundamentally contesting critiques of the INTACD	55
4 Research gaps, case study selection and methods	67
4.1 Combining Post-development and critical anti-corruption studies and resulting research gaps	67
4.2 Contrasting cases: Paraguay and Chile	71
4.3 Methods: discourse analysis and constructionist expert interviews	74
4.3.1 Argumentative discourse analysis	77
4.3.2 Constructionist expert interviews	81
4.3.3 Delimitation of the discourse	84

5	Anti-corruption narratives in Paraguay	87
5.1	The economic narrative	89
5.2	The 'orekuete' narrative	91
5.3	Historical path dependency (HPD): corruption as a legacy of the Stroessner regime	95
5.4	Interim conclusion	99
6	Anti-corruption narratives in Chile	103
6.1	Chile as a success case and an example in Latin America	104
6.2	Subnarratives: centre-left and right wing	110
6.3	The contesting narrative	118
6.4	Interim conclusion	122
7	Two ways of emancipation through local translations of international discourse	125
8	The anti-corruption discourse and the concept of social capital	129
8.1	Corruption as a social relationship and the division between micro- and macro-moral	130
8.2	The INTACD and its conceptualisation of personal social relations	132
8.3	Personal social relations in the concept of social capital	134
8.4	Discretion, reinforced anti-statism and a paternalist development discourse	138
9	Conclusions	141
10	Literature	147