

POLICING AND PUNISHMENT
IN CHINA

From Patriarchy to 'the People'

Michael R. Dutton

*Department of Political Science
University of Melbourne*

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

TABLE OF CONTENTS

List of figures	ix
Author's note	xi
Chapter 1:
Repetition of the old, emergence of the new: social regulation and punishment in China	1
The 'feudal remnants' debate	6
An alternative to the 'feudal remnants' method	12
<hr style="border: 0.5px solid black;"/>
	SECTION I: THE POLICING OF VIRTUE
Chapter 2:
The policing of households: the meaning of filial duty	21
Household registration and European discourses	33
Chinese household registration: a flexible technology	38
Registration as a harbinger of the modern?	40
Marxist and Wittfogelian views of the state	43
Feudal concession or ruling-class repression?	46
Some problems with total state theories	49
Conclusion	49
Chapter 3:
Toward a history of Chinese registration	55
Toward a history of registration	56
The Tang dynasty register	57
The Song dynasty register	63
The Yuan dynasty register	67
The household register in the Ming and Qing dynasties	69
The village pacts	70
Surveillance, control and punishment in the village pact	73
Patriarchal punishments and the place of the state	79
The 'positivities' of mutuality	84
Baojia : a technology of negotiation	85
Conclusion	88

SECTION II: THE PENAL REGIME

95

Chapter 4:	From the policing of virtue to the policing of pain: early forms of punishment in China	97
	Definitions of the prison	106
	The family as the object of punishment	109
	The secular nature of Chinese law	111
	The precision necessary in the production of truth	114
	Legal precision and the prison	117
	The strengthening of specifications of difference	119
	Regulatory mechanisms and mutuality in the patriarchalist punishments of the Sui-Tang period	122
	Some problems in the theorization of the prison	128
	Prisons in the Song dynasty	131
	Punishment and regulation in the Ming	134
	Some problems in the construction of a genealogy of the prison	140
	The production of an Orientalist discourse of the East	142
	Conclusion	144
Chapter 5:	From the policing of pain to the economy of discipline: punishment in the modern period	151
	The emergence of the modern prison and the individualized disciplinary subject	157
	The architectural forms of the modern prison	160
	The emergence of the individualized disciplinary subject	163
	The architectural as a means of surveillance	167
	The Beijing model prison	168
	Shifting regimes of punishment	171
	A new regime of policing	175
	Re-emergence of past practices	178
	The yiken system of the Republican period	178
	The maintenance of Western systems	182
	Conclusion	183

	SECTION III: THE POLICING OF HOUSEHOLDS, THE POLICING OF WORK	187
Chapter 6:	The emergence of the hukou	189
	The decline of baojia and the emergence of the hukou	191
	The emergence of socialist planning	195
	Chinese and Soviet systems of registration	203
	Local policing in the PRC	214
	Local committees and registration in the PRC	214
	Personnel file system and registration	222
	The register and socialism	226
	'Collectivities'	233
	Conclusion	236
	SECTION IV: ON USEFUL TIMBER	247
Chapter 7:	Securing the perimeter	249
	On useful timber: the role of the family	253
	'Mobilize the power of relatives and family to bring about reform'	258
	Truth, science and the masses	262
	Relying upon the masses	268
	The 'positivities' of planning	270
	The emergence of the plan: the beginnings of reform through labour?	272
	The negative side-effects of planning	273
	Popular will versus the expert	278
	Past practices and socialist mediation	280
	Comparative communist studies and Chinese penal practices: why the difference?	282
	Problems with internal regulation	283
	Conclusion	285

Chapter 8:	Gulags and utopias	291
	A question of heritage	292
	A theory of productive forces?	295
	Disciplinary projects	301
	Classification, discipline and control: entering the prison	304
	Internment and the initial education process	305
	Classification, discipline and control: the formation and government of the team	308
	The reordering of the body	311
	The ornamentation of the body, the transformation of the mind	312
	Education	314
<hr/> SECTION V: A RETURN TO THE SOCIAL <hr/>		323
Chapter 9:	The spread of the 'carceral'?	325
	The new conditions of crime engendered by reform	327
	The recidivist and transient criminal	327
	Technologies of policing in need of reform: the role of the register and the security committee	330
	Conclusion	339
Chapter 10:	Conclusion	347
	Glossary	355
	Selected bibliography	361
	Index	381