

FICTIONALIZING THE REAL AND REALIZING THE FICTIONAL:
CRIMINAL NARRATIVES AND THE RHETORIC OF GANG CRIME
IN EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY LONDON

Katherine A. Gehr

Submitted to the faculty of the University Graduate School in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree
Doctor of Philosophy
in the Department of English
Indiana University

March 2000

Table of Contents

Introduction	1
Chapter One	7
“In All Reigns and in All Ages”: Upper-Class Crime and the Mohock Scandal of 1711-12
Shadwell and the Drama of Upper-Class Crime	12
Gay, the Mohocks, and the Worlds of Words and Experiences	34
Chapter Two	58
Tall Tales of Pirates and Pirates who Tell Tales: Narrativity and Piracy in Daniel Defoe’s A General History of the Pyrates and Captain Singleton
Constructing Piracy’s Criminal Mode	62
Staging Piracy’s Metafictional Mode	84
Novel Connections between Piracy’s Modes	93
Chapter Three	107
Criminal Turn’d Villain: Defoe and the Transformation of Jonathan Wild
Criminalizing Wild	112
Fictionalizing Wild	120
Competing Wild Tales	134
Chapter Four	157
Victims Turn’d Villains: Fielding and the Melodramatic Case of Elizabeth Canning
Essentialized Characters and Dramatic Moments	161
Magistrate and Master Reader	176
Melodrama, Performativity, and the Implications of Fielding’s Defense	196
Works Cited	210