Economic Liberalization: No Panacea

The Experiences of {Latin America} and Asia

Edited by

TARIQ BANURI

CLARENDON PRESS · OXFORD
1991

CONTENTS

1. Introduction 1

Tariq Banuri

1.1 The Case for Economic Liberalization
1.2 A Critique of Economic Liberalization
1.3 The Latin American Experience
1.4 Conclusions: Possibilities for the Future

2. Policy, Governance, and the Management of Conflict 29

Edward J. Amadeo and Tariq Banuri

2.1. Introduction
2.2 A Political Model of Economics
2.3 The Political Economy of Constraints
2.4 The Latin American Crisis
2.5 Conclusions: The Case for Pragmatism

3. The World Economic Slowdown and the Asian and Latin American Economies: A Comparative Analysis of Economic Structure, Policy, and Performance 57

Alan Hughes and Ajit Singh

3.1 Introduction
3.2 The Reasons for Superior Asian Economic Performance: Alternative Hypotheses
3.3 The Comparative Economic Performance of Asian and Latin American Economies
3.4 Explanations of Differential Economic Performance
3.5 The Comparative Impact of Exogenous Shocks
3.6 Exports, Capital Flight, and the Exchange Rate
3.7 Notes on Large Semi-Industrial Economies in Asia and Latin America
3.8 Conclusion

4. Economic Openness: Problems to the Century's End 100

Lance Taylor

4.1 Perspectives on Trade from an LDC

4.2 External Shocks: The Current Account
4.3 Capital Markets and Debt
4.4 Morals for Policy Lines
Appendix: Trade Policy and Growth

5. Some Reflections on Comparative Latin American Economic Performance and Policy 149

Albert Fishlow

5.1 Introduction
5.2 Latin American Economic Performance
5.3 Trade Policies and Performance
5.4 The Role of the State
5.5 A Final Word

6. Worlds within the Third World: Labour Market Institutions in Asia and Latin America 171

Tariq Banuri and Edward J. Amadeo

6.1 A Taxonomy of Labour Market Institutions
6.2 Contemporary Determinants of Labour Market Institutions
6.3 Historical Determinants
6.4 Democracy, Governance, and Hysteresis
Appendix: Wage-Setting Institutions

REFERENCES 221

INDEX 231