Men of Influence
Stalin’s Diplomats in Europe, 1930–1939

Sabine Dullin

Translated by Richard Veasey

Edinburgh University Press
Contents

Acknowledgements vii
List of abbreviations ix

Introduction 1

1. Stalin’s actions and the part played by Litvinov 11
   - Litvinov and Stalin: a marriage of convenience 11
   - Stalin’s obsessions 20
   - Litvinov’s own sphere of action 28

2. Diplomats who were not quite like the rest 44
   - Portrait of a crocodile 44
   - An elitist profile 51
   - Litvinov, chief administrator 61
   - The specific characteristics of state service in the USSR 69

3. Tactical oscillations 92
   - Away from Germany and towards France 93
   - The three sides of the geopolitical triangle 111
   - The quest for a policy of equidistance 122

4. Gathering information, exerting influence 158
   - Pro-Soviet milieux 159
   - Soviet diplomats and the press 175
   - Creating an image in Geneva 191

5. The shadow of the Kremlin 212
   - The cataclysm of the purges 212
   - Stalin and his group take control of diplomacy 228
6. Sidelined by the Soviet motherland 248
   A story of demoralisation 248
   A signal to Hitler 264
   Epilogue: transition from the old to the new 274

Map of the places referred to 299
Diplomats before and after the purges 300
Primary sources 307
Bibliography 321
Index 337