

Kari Palonen

SUB Hamburg

A/496952

The Politics of Limited Times

The Rhetoric of Temporal Judgment in Parliamentary Democracies

Nomos

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	11
1. Times of Politics	13
1.1. Toward a temporal reading of politics	14
1.2. The scarce times of parliamentary democracies	17
1.3. The revaluation of timeliness	22
1.4. The layers of political time: lifetime, momentum, time-span and calendar	25
1.5. Learning to play with limited times	32
2. The Times of Enfranchisement	36
2.1. The contingency of suffrage	36
2.2. The last battle against democracy: Britain 1866–1867	40
2.2.1. A reform within the English tradition	41
2.2.2. William Gladstone: A reversal of the conditions for suffrage	42
2.2.3. Benjamin Disraeli against the rule of numbers	44
2.2.4. Robert Lowe: Democracy as a threat to progress	46
2.2.5. John Bright: Suffrage and political freedom	49
2.2.6. John Stuart Mill: Political education through franchise	51
2.2.7. Parliament reform, political times and temporal scarcity	52
2.3. The enfranchisement of women: The first debates	57
2.3.1. A new item on the reform agenda	57
2.3.2. Women, franchise and politics	58
2.3.3. Harriet Taylor: The break with custom	62
2.3.4. Lydia E. Becker and the redistribution of power	65
2.3.5. Equal vote and the temporalisation of politics	68
2.4. Universal suffrage as a contract: Léon Gambetta	70

2.5.	A new legitimisation of democracy: Max Weber	76
2.5.1.	The four “Kratien”	77
2.5.2.	Occasional and professional politicians in democracy	84
2.5.3.	Democracy, conceptual change and political times	88
2.6.	Suffrage, time and scarcity	92
3.	The Political Rhythms of Alternation	95
3.1.	Natural versus political times	96
3.1.1.	Rotation as a quasi-natural time	96
3.1.2.	The imperative mandate	98
3.1.3.	The endless discussion	102
3.2.	The momentum of elections	104
3.2.1.	The politicisation of elections	105
3.2.2.	The politics of electoral terms	108
3.2.3.	The extraordinary time of elections	113
3.3.	The politics of alternation	115
3.3.1.	From constitutional to parliamentary government	115
3.3.2.	The defence of alternation: Eugène Pierre	117
3.3.3.	The formation and dismissal of governments	121
3.3.4.	Majority vs. coalition governments	129
3.3.5.	Elections as an extension of the parliamentary paradigm	132
3.4.	The rhythms of political change	135
4.	The Rhetorical Times of Parliamentary Politics	138
4.1.	The rhetorical politics of parliamentarism	139
4.2.	The deliberative rhetoric of parliamentary procedure	146
4.2.1.	Deliberation in the ancient assemblies	146
4.2.2.	The formation and modification of parliamentary procedure	148
4.2.3.	The legitimisation of the parliamentary procedure	152
4.2.4.	The procedure and the play with times	156

4.3. Parliamentary eloquence and the temporalisation of politics	158
4.3.1. Parliamentary eloquence in Britain	159
4.3.2. William E. Gladstone on eloquence and the eloquence of Gladstone	169
4.3.3. Walter Bagehot on eloquence as an obstacle to policy	173
4.3.4. French parliamentary eloquence	179
4.3.5. Louis-Marie de Cormenin on parliamentary eloquence and improvisation	183
4.3.6. Alexis de Tocqueville on the linguistic change in democracies	187
4.3.7. Louis Barthou on the plenary speaker	189
4.3.8. Ernst Müller-Meiningen on parliamentary speaking	193
4.3.9. The end of parliamentary eloquence?	196
4.4. Parliamentarism, rhetoric and time	199
5. Times of Political Agency	205
5.1. Times of the parliamentarian	206
5.2. Times of the minister	213
5.3. Times of the candidate	217
5.4. Times of the citizen-voter	221
5.5. Plural times of politics	225
6. The Play with Temporal Layers	228
6.1. The politics of lifetime	229
6.2. The politics of the momentum	232
6.3. The politics of the time-span	235
6.4. The politics of the calendar	238
6.5. The difficult politics of limited times	242
7. The Temporal Subtext of Parliamentary Politics	245
References	249
1. Online References	249
2. Printed References	250