Transition Economies
Transformation, Development, and Society in Eastern Europe and the Former Soviet Union

Aleksandr V. Gevorkyan
Contents

List of figures x
List of tables xii
Preface xiii
Acknowledgments xviii
List of abbreviations xix

PART I
Introduction: the great unknowns 1

1 The great unknowns: post-socialist economies and societies in motion 3
   Introductory remarks 3
   Where are they on the map? 4
   Leading to the great unknowns 8
   Problem: transition? Transition from? Transition to? 11
   Conclusion 12
   Appendix 13

2 Transition vs. transformation: what is clear and not so clear about transition economics 15
   In search of a transition: definitions 15
   Transition vs. transformation 16
   The transformation 20
   Was it inevitable? 21
   The totality of the social and economic dynamic 26
   The dialectics of transition 29
   Conclusion 32

PART II
The planned economy 35

3 The economic and social context at the turn of the twentieth century: from the Russian Empire to the Soviet Union 37
   In the beginning there was . . . 37
   The emancipation of the serfs in 1861 38
Contents

The allure of early capitalism before the Russian revolution 39
Emergence of the Leninist State 43
The New Economic Policy 45
Industrialization, collectivization, debates, and the first Five-Year Plans 47
Initial analysis 49
Conclusion 50

4 The war economy and post-World War II reconstruction in the USSR 53
The setting 53
Emerging transformation right before the war 54
The war economy 56
Post-war recovery in the USSR 59
More on central planning Soviet-style 64
Conclusion 70

5 From war to wall to common market: the dialectics of the Eastern European socialist economy 72
The new political landscape of Europe 72
Before and around the wall: the political economy of Eastern Europe 73
Socialist economics in Eastern Europe immediately after WW II 78
A model of the common market 81
Crisis in disguise? 85
Conclusion 87

PART III

The economics of the market reform 89

6 The socialist economic model, market socialism, stagnation, perestroika, and the end of plan 91
The socialist economic model 91
Market socialism or self-management 98
Right before 1985 102
The world order shaken: perestroika and the Berlin Wall 107
Macroeconomic challenges and opportunities 112
Conclusion: the end of plan 118

7 Free market reform: liberalization, privatization, shock therapy, and policy misfortunes 122
Setting the stage 122
What happened during the 1990s 123
Macroeconomics of human transition 130
Conceptualizing the reform 134
Privatization 138
PART IV
The human transition: still happening

8 Poverty, income inequality, labor migration, and diaspora potential
   Introduction 161
   Poverty and income inequality 162
   Labor migration 169
   Diaspora and economic development 174
   Measuring diaspora’s effectiveness 176
   Some new and not so new policy proposals 181
   Conclusion: diaspora model and social costs of transition 182
   Appendix 184

PART V
The roaring 2000s and the present

9 Contours of the new era post-transition economy: they are all different
   The character of the new millennium 189
   The “roaring” 2000s 190
   Financial sector development 208
   Regional integration and foreign direct investment 216
   Conclusion 225
   Appendix 226

10 Facing the present by knowing the past
   Why the present 231
   The macroeconomic (competitive) aspect 231
   Human transition (again) 235
   Institutions 241
   Finding a place in the present 246
   Of the future 248

References 250
Index 268