

Diminishing Returns at Work

The Consequences of Long Working Hours

John H. Pencavel

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Preface and Acknowledgments | ix

1. Introduction: Why Working Hours? | 1

2. A Brief History of Working Hours | 13

Trade Unions | 17

Employers | 25

Statutory Legislation | 30

A Market Explanation | 38

America and Britain Contrasted | 42

What Has Been Learned? | 48

3. Conceptual Framework | 52

An Expression Inspired by Charles Cobb and Paul Douglas | 57

An Expression Inspired by Benjamin Gompertz | 62

4. Estimates of Production Functions | 68

Observations Collected by Horace Vernon During the First
World War | 68

Observations Collected by the Industrial Health Research
Board During the Second World War | 95

Contents

Observations Collected by Max Kossoris and Reinfried Kohler During the Second World War	104
Observations Collected by Ben Craig on Plywood Mills in the State of Washington	111
Some Conclusions About Hours and Output of Workers from These Four Cases	125
5. Further Implications of the Augmented Production Functions	133
Part-Time and Full-Time Workers	133
Overtime Work	136
Macroeconomics	137
6. Hours of Work, Health, and Well-Being	138
Cognitive Function	143
Cardiovascular Disease	144
Nationally Representative Populations	145
Injuries and Accidents	148
The Well-Being of the Household	149
7. The Association Between Working Hours and Hourly Earnings	151
The Demise of a Basic Issue	151
Information Provided by Self-Employed Workers	172
A Third Class of Explanations	180
8. Concluding Notes	182
DATA APPENDICES	193
REFERENCES	227
INDEX	243