

THE COMPUTER AND THE CLERK

ENID MUMFORD AND OLIVE BANKS

CONTENTS

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS	page xi
INTRODUCTION	1
How the study came about	1
The British project	2
Dilemmas and objectives	5
PART I OFFICES IN TRANSITION
1 Some problems of office automation	9
Technical change in the office may be more difficult than on the shop floor	9
Our approach	11
Some introductory points	12
Staffing problems	13
Staff reactions	14
Our main conclusions	16
2 Clerks and social change	19
Changes in the role and status of the clerk	19
Mechanisation in the office	27
Some problems of change	31
PART II OUR CASE STUDY FIRMS
3 The Royal Exchange Bank—The development of the new     computer centre	37
Historical background	37
Royal Exchange's decision to install a computer	38
Preparing for the computer's arrival	39
The installation period at the computer centre	45
Staff and staff relationships	49
Programmers	49
Girl assistants	52

CONTENTS

Relations between the computer centre and branches	55
Relations with the computer manufacturer	58
4 The Royal Exchange Bank—Work organisation and staff attitudes before the change	60
The work of a branch	60
The five branches and their managers	62
The bank clerks	65
Social characteristics	66
Attitudes to the old system of work	67
Job satisfaction	70
Attitudes to the idea of office automation	72
Factors influencing the clerks' attitudes	78
Conclusions	82
5 The Royal Exchange Bank—The New Work system	83
Post-change problems in the E.D.P. branches	84
King George's Place	84
St. John's Avenue	85
Paul Street	86
Ringer Square	87
Attitudes to work after the change	90
How the clerks thought the computer had affected the branch and the bank	93
E.D.P. branches	93
North Office	94
How the clerks thought the computer had affected themselves	96
E.D.P. branches	96
North Office	102
Clerical work as a career	105
Conclusions	107
6 The Royal Exchange Bank—An analysis of attitudes after the change	110
Some factors influencing attitudes	111
E.D.P. branches	112
North Office	115
The handling of the change process	118
Problems met by E.D.P. clerks	119
Communication and the North Office clerks	124

CONTENTS

7	Carters—The introduction of a new system	128
	Selecting and training personnel	129
	The installation period	131
	Conflict and strain in the computer centre	134
	Relations between the computer centre and affected departments	137
	Relations with the computer manufacturer	139
8	Carters—The accounts department	142
	Before the change	142
	Work organisation	142
	Group characteristics	143
	Attitudes to work	144
	Attitudes to the idea of office automation	146
	Factors affecting the clerks' attitudes to the idea of change	147
	After the Change	150
	Work organisation	151
	Group characteristics	153
	The computer's effect on work	155
	Factors influencing attitudes	160
	The handling of the change process	163
 PART III THE ANALYSIS OF CHANGE
9	Change and its consequences	167
	The consequences of change for the organisation	167
	The consequences of change for the group and the individual	176
	Programmers	177
	Management	179
	Clerks	183
	Environment	183
	Job grading and promotion	184
	Job status	186
	Job content	187
10	The management of change	195
	The reactions of clerks to change	196
	The individual who experiences the change	199
	Sex	200
	Age	200

CONTENTS

Social Class	201
Education	201
Personality	201
Needs and goals	202
Job attitudes	206
The situation in which the change takes place	206
Past policy on change	207
Propaganda	207
Relationships	208
The way the change is managed	210
Communication	211
Management and communication	214
Systems and techniques	217
Consultation and participation	219
Timing and phasing the change	222
Rewards	223
The objective consequences of change	224
Conclusions	226
11 A practical approach	227
Objectives	228
Research into alternatives	229
Analysis of consequences	230
Planning	231
Execution	231
APPENDICES
A. Methodological problems	235
B. Rurditch City Council—A communications strategy	238
BIBLIOGRAPHY	245
INDEX	249