<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CONTENTS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

List of figures xi
List of tables xii
Contributors xiii
Acknowledgement xvi
Preface xvii

Introduction: Nordic perspectives on human resource management 1
Helene Ahl

References 12

PART I
General features of HR work 15

1 Developing co-workership in organisations 17
Karin Kilhammar

‘Co-workership’ – a multifaceted and flexible concept 18
The growth and use of ‘co-workership’ over time 19
The leadership that is needed to develop co-workership 20
Strategies for developing co-workership – two examples 21
What can be learnt from these two examples? 23
Challenges that HR face in co-workership development 25
Recommended reading 27
References 27
5 Creativity at the workplace
   Ylva Lindberg
   The right balance between freedom and control 73
   Creativity may need to be stimulated 75
   Play and the importance of the social context for creativity 77
   Group dynamics at various stages of creativity 78
   Creativity benefits from a safe and friendly work atmosphere 79
   Creative leadership and participation 80
   The consequences for HR work 81
   The balance between freedom and control 82
   The balance between playfulness and seriousness 82
   The balance between social fellowship and being alone 82
   The balance between different employee profiles 83
   The balance between stability and change 83
   Recommended reading 83
   References 83

6 Recruitment mistakes, future employees, and fabulous fantasies: the market’s need of magical qualities
   Roland S. Persson
   Predictions from lax administrations 87
   Gilded statistical correlations 90
   Here today, gone tomorrow! 92
   Recruitment magic and the fourth industrial revolution 94
   With both feet on the ground – a final comment 96
   Recommended reading 99
   References 99

PART II
Diversity and inclusion

7 The equality work that needs to be done
   Helene Ahl
   The Swedish law against gender discrimination 109
   Are the tools provided by anti-discrimination legislation sufficient? 110
   Common arguments that are used in the gender equality debate 111
   Suggested reading 117
   References 117
Dealing with suspicion and xenophobia 156
Dealing with discrimination 156
Why are employers (and quite a few other individuals) xenophobic? 157
Practical advice to human resources personnel 158
Recommended reading 159
References 159

12 Functional workplaces for people with disabilities 163
Joel Hedegaard and Martin Hugo
The right to social inclusion and participation 164
The reality of exclusion – a Swedish example 165
High-functioning autism 166
How the IT programme was arranged and its purpose 168
Breaking down feelings of isolation and the experience of participation in a meaningful social context 168
What can employers learn from the IT programme? 169
The importance that the employer adapts the work environment 170
Work assignment structure and clarity 171
A work leader/mentor who understands the individual 171
Concluding remarks concerning fixed or dynamic competencies 172
Suggestions for further reading 173
References 174

13 Working in knowledge-intensive organisations when it is impossible to be physically present: female employees who suffer from chronic illnesses 177
Claudia Gillberg
Exclusion and a loss of knowledge 178
Organising work tasks during a chronic illness – some problems 179
Measures that can be taken 182
The re-evaluation of physical presence by the routine application of online tools 183
Distribution of work assignments and making resources available 183
The reappraisal of employers to create workplaces which are characterised by equality and diversity 184
Challenging the norm that one should be physically present at work 187
Recommended reading 188
References 188
14 Those who know more than you: talent management in the Google era
Roland S. Persson and Vezir Aktas

American ideas and changing ideals 191
What is talent? 193
Extreme talents 196
Talent management for extreme talents 198
Recommended reading 200
References 200

Conclusion: HR work – a balancing act with integrity
Ingela Bergmo-Prvulovic and Karin Kilhammar

Challenges for the HR work of the future 203
The competencies that are needed at HR departments to meet future challenges 213
References 216

Index 219