

Regulating Offshore Petroleum Resources

The British and Norwegian Models

Edited by

Eduardo G. Pereira

University of Eastern Finland, Finland and Scandinavian Institute of Maritime Law, University of Oslo, Norway

Henrik Bjørnebye

Scandinavian Institute of Maritime Law, University of Oslo, Norway

 Edward Elgar
PUBLISHING

Cheltenham, UK • Northampton, MA, USA

Contents

List of contributors	viii
PART I INTRODUCTION
1 Introduction Eduardo G. Pereira and Henrik Bjørnebye	2
PART II NORWAY
2 Background: Norway Erik Jarlsby	6
2.1 Introduction	6
2.2 Economy and industries	7
2.3 Employment and human resources	16
2.4 Demographics	20
2.5 Infrastructure and access to markets	24
2.6 Welfare systems	27
2.7 Cultural practices and transparency	30
2.8 The political context	32
2.9 Environmental standards	33
2.10 Cooperation between the industry and the government	36
2.11 Conclusion	37
3 Hydrocarbon policy and legislation: Norway Tonje Pareli Gormley and Merete Kristensen	39
3.1 Introduction	39
3.2 Historical evolution of Norwegian hydrocarbon policy and legislation	43
3.3 Norwegian state organization of upstream activities	52
3.4 Norwegian state participation in upstream activities	56
3.5 Norwegian local content	75
3.6 Norwegian government take	83

3.7	Revenue management	89
3.8	Norwegian investment protections and other incentives	92
3.9	Conclusion	94
4	Licensing regime: Norway Henrik Bjørnebye and Catherine Banet	96
4.1	Introduction	96
4.2	Opening of new areas for petroleum activities	98
4.3	The exploration and production licence	103
4.4	The Joint Operating Agreement (JOA)	107
4.5	Development and operation	110
4.6	Third-party access to infrastructure	113
4.7	Cessation	116
4.8	Petroleum, the environment and climate: emissions regulation	117
4.9	Conclusion	125
PART III UNITED KINGDOM
5	Background: United Kingdom Raphael Heffron, Mohammad Hazrati, Greg Gordon and Darren McCauley	128
5.1	Introduction	128
5.2	Economy and industries	129
5.3	Employment and human resources	137
5.4	Demographics	140
5.5	Infrastructure and access to markets	145
5.6	Welfare system	149
5.7	Cultural practices	152
5.8	Political and social support	154
5.9	Environmental standards	156
5.10	Cooperation between industry and the government	160
5.11	Conclusion	162
6	Hydrocarbon policies and legislation: United Kingdom Greg Gordon	165
6.1	Introduction	165
6.2	Historical development of British hydrocarbon laws and policies	166

6.3	British state organization and resource and environmental management in upstream activities	180
6.4	British governmental participation in upstream activities	185
6.5	British local content and social funds	191
6.6	British government take from hydrocarbon operations	198
6.7	British investment protections and other encouragements to attract investors	204
6.8	Conclusion	208
7	Licensing regime: United Kingdom Yanal Abul Failat	211
7.1	Introduction	211
7.2	The licence	212
7.3	Third-party access to upstream infrastructure	222
7.4	Joint Operating Agreements (JOAs)	226
7.5	Environmental	246
7.6	Conclusion	248
PART IV CONCLUSION
8	Conclusion Eduardo G. Pereira and Henrik Bjørnebye	251
	Index	257