

HEGEL'S ONTOLOGY OF POWER

The Structure of Social Domination in Capitalism

ARASH ABAZARI

*Sharif University of Technology
Institute for Research in Fundamental Sciences (IPM)*

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Acknowledgments	page xi
Note on Abbreviations and Citations	xiii
Introduction	I
1 Reading the Logic as a Social Theory	1
2 General Aims and Method	9
3 Summary of Chapters	11
1 Illusion or Semblance	15
1.1 "Socially Necessary Illusion" in Adorno	17
1.2 Semblance in the Logic	21
1.3 The Dialectic of Semblance	27
1.4 The Logic of Ideology in Marx	35
2 Opposition	44
2.1 The Fundamentality of Opposition	48
2.2 The Dialectic of the Determinations of Reflection	51
2.3 Opposition as Domination	57
2.4 ... and the Logical Proof for It	60
2.5 The "Truth" of Diversity in Opposition	64
2.6 Opposition between Capital and Labor	67
2.7 ... and between Genders	72
2.8 Conclusion	75
3 Totality	77
3.1 Society as Totality in Adorno	81
3.2 Two Misconceptions of Totality	86
3.3 Actuality	91
3.4 The Critique of Spinoza's Substance	97
3.5 Substance as Absolute Power	102
3.6 The "Spell" of Totality	108
4 Capital as Totality	112
4.1 The Critique of Methodological Individualism	112

4.2	Capital as the Dialectical Unity of Circulation and Production	120
4.3	The Circuit of Capital	129
4.4	... and the Critique of Ideology	133
4.5	The Reproduction of Capital	135
4.6	The Power of Capital	142
5	The Necessity of Totality	153
5.1	The Preliminaries	154
5.2	The Critique of the Cosmological Proof	160
5.3	The Dialectic of Necessity and Contingency in the Logic	165
5.4	... and in Capitalism	175
5.5	The Illusion and Contingency of Freedom	183
5.6	The Critique of Pluralism	191
	Conclusion: The Failed Transition to the Realm of Genuine Freedom	193
	Works Cited	205
	Index	213