Occasional Paper No. 32

Incentives, rewards, motivation and the receipt of income support

JACQUELINE HOMEL

CHRIS RYAN

Social Policy Evaluation, Analysis and Research Centre (SPEAR), The Australian National University

Improving the lives of Australians
Contents

Executive summary v
1 Introduction 1
2 Extrinsic and intrinsic motivation 3
  2.1 The psychological theoretical motivation literature 3
  2.2 Intrinsic motivation 3
  2.3 Extrinsic motivation 4
  2.4 The empirical psychological literature and meta-analyses 5
  2.5 Summary of the psychology literature 6
  2.6 The economics literature 6
  2.7 Summary of the section 9
3 Motivation, incentives and institutional behaviour 11
  3.1 Reform of welfare and the way authorities deal with individuals 11
  3.2 Procedural justice and legitimacy 12
4 A conceptual framework for analysing welfare reform 15
  4.1 The set-up for the framework 15
  4.2 Responses to changes in incentives with fixed preferences 16
  4.3 Responses to changes in incentives with responsive preferences 20
  4.4 Summary of the section 22
5 Empirical welfare reform literature 23
  5.1 Changes in 'in-work' benefits 23
  5.2 Mandatory activities, sanctions and activity-related benefits 28
  5.3 Monitoring, counselling and job search programs 33
  5.4 Increases and decreases in benefits and changes in clawback parameters 35
  5.5 Summary of the section 37
6 Conclusions and implications 39
List of shortened forms 41
References 43