

A REDDER SHADE OF GREEN

Intersections of Science and Socialism

IAN ANGUS

MONTHLY REVIEW PRESS

New York

Contents

INTRODUCTION: Essential Debates at the Intersections
of Science and Socialism | 7

PART ONE: Natural Science and the Making of Scientific Socialism | 13

1. Marx and Engels and the Red Chemist | 15
2. Marx and Engels and Darwin | 27

PART TWO: Responding to the Anthropocene | 47

3. A Challenge that Socialists Cannot Ignore | 49
4. Ecomodernists and the “Good Anthropocene” | 58
5. The Most Dangerous Environmentalist Concept? | 67

PART THREE: Numbers Are Not Enough | 87

6. Tunnel Vision at the Royal Society | 89
7. The Return of the Population Bombers | 99
8. Did NASA Predict Civilization’s Collapse? | 113

PART FOUR: Saving Species, Saving Oceans | 123

9. Third World Farming and Biodiversity | 125
10. More Plastic than Fish | 131

PART FIVE: Toward an Ecological Civilization | 139

11. The Myth of “Environmental Catastrophism” | 141
12. Ecosocialists and the Fight for Climate Justice | 158
13. Ecosocialism: A Society of Good Ancestors | 166

Acknowledgments | 180

Notes | 181

Index | 197