Stefania Zanda

Building Efficient Management and Leadership Practices

The Contemporary Relevance of Chester I. Barnard's Thought in the Context of the Knowledge-Based Economy

Springer
Contents

1 Objectives and Research Methodology .................................................. 1
  1.1 Structure of the Present Work ..................................................... 1
  1.2 The Fundamental Questions of the Research ................................ 3
  References .................................................................................... 3

2 Outlines of an Effective Management Model in the Light of the Economic, Social, and Moral Requirements of the Knowledge-Based Economy ......................................................... 5
  2.1 Quality of Leadership and the Decision-Making, Control, Organization, and Execution Processes .................................................. 5
  2.2 Characteristics of Traditional Management Models ........................... 7
  2.3 New Management Models for the Needs of the Knowledge-Based Economy ....................................................................................... 9
    2.3.1 The Main Factors That Have Stimulated Change in the Economy and Society ................................................................. 9
    2.3.2 Knowledge Becomes a Strategic Factor of Productive Activity and Develops “Intellectual Managerial Capitalism” .............................................. 14
    2.3.3 Characteristics of New Management Models ................................. 16
    2.3.4 Presentation of an Effective Management Model That Permits Evaluation of the Originality, Relevance, and Utility of Barnard’s Model of the Executive Process... 17
  References .................................................................................... 20

3 The Cultural Background and Socio-Economic Context in Which Barnard Developed his Theory of Executive Functions to Create an Efficient and Effective Cooperative System ........................................... 23
  3.1 Barnard: Scholar of Organizational Behavior and Precursor of Management Theory ................................................................. 23
  3.2 Market Imperatives and Enterprise Behavior .................................... 24
  3.3 The Philosophy of Individualism Versus the Philosophy of Social Ethics ....................................................................................... 26
Contents

3.4 The Managerial Revolution, the Affirmation of Managerial Capitalism and Its Influence on Barnard’s Thought .......................................................... 27

3.5 The Operation and Results of the Capitalist System: Intellectual Stimulus for the Development of Management Models in a Context of Socio-Economic Dynamism ................................................ 31

3.6 Barnard’s Contribution to the Sustainability of the Capitalist System ........................................................................................................... 33

References .................................................................................................................. 34

4 The Executive Process and Its Organic Functions. The Fundamental Role of Leadership .......................................................... 37

4.1 Barnard, Pioneer in the Application of General Systems Theory to Organizations .................................................................................. 37

4.2 Towards the Construction of a General Theory of for-Profit and non-Profit Organizations ........................................................................ 40

4.3 The Organic Functions of the Executive Process According to Barnard .................................................................................................... 41

4.4 Barnard’s Theory of the Executive Process ........................................................................................................................................ 42

4.5 The Modernity of Barnard’s Thought .................................................................................................................................................. 44

4.6 The Conceptual System of Management: Its Current Configuration ........................................................................................................ 45

4.7 Coordination Is Not an Autonomous Management Function .............................................................................................................. 47

References .................................................................................................................. 50

5 The Formulation and Control of the General Purposes of a Company and Its Sub-system Objectives. The Creation of the Organizational Structure and the Information System .............. 53

5.1 Introduction .......................................................................................................................... 53

5.2 Motives and Objectives of Organization Members ............................................................................................................................ 54

5.3 In Every Organization There Is a Purpose, Which Is the Unifying and Coordinating Principle for the Activities of the Members .................................................................................................................. 55

5.4 Cooperative and Subjective Aspects of Organizational Purposes ........................................................................................................... 55

5.5 Organizational and Individual Ends .......................................................................................................................... 56

5.6 General Purposes of the Organization and Its Sub-system Objectives: The Means-Ends Chain ............................................................................................................. 58

5.7 Definition of Organizational Structure: Organizational Roles, Communication Lines, and Information System ..................................................................................................................... 59

5.8 The Formulation of General Purposes According to Barnard .................................................................................................................. 60

5.9 The Determination of General Purposes Is Not the Product of Equal Participation of the Various Members of the Organization in the Decision-Making Process .......................................................................................................................... 61

5.10 The Theoretical Approaches of Cyert, March, and Galbraith and the Formulation of the General Purposes of Companies .............................................................................................................................. 62

5.11 Concluding Remarks on Equal Participation of the Various Stakeholders in the Formulation of the General Purposes of Companies .......................................................................................................................... 66

References .................................................................................................................. 69
6 Barnard and the Theory of Authority ................................................. 71
  6.1 Introduction ........................................................................... 71
  6.2 The Subjective Aspect of Formal Authority: The Assent of the Individual Who Receives the Order Determines Its “Authoritative Character” ...................................................... 72
  6.3 The Objective Aspect of Formal Authority: Pillar of Organizational Structure ................................................................................. 75
  6.4 The Characteristics of an Effective System of Communication .......................................................................................................................... 77
  6.5 The Importance of the Distinction Between Subjective and Objective Aspects .............................................................................................. 79
References .......................................................................................... 80

7 The Role of Executives in Making the Organization’s Goals Compatible with Members’ Goals. The Search for Equilibrium Between the Organization’s Incentives and Members’ Contributions ................................................................. 81
  7.1 “Socializing” and “Personalizing” Dimensions in Organizations .................................................................................................................. 81
  7.2 Brief Summary of Executive Process Deployment .............................. 82
  7.3 The Creation and Maintenance of a Cooperative System and the Function of Leadership that Inspires This Process ........................................... 83
  7.4 The Elements That Form the Basis of a Cooperative System: The will to Collaborate, the Incentives to be Provided to Organization Members and the Strategy of Persuasion ........................................... 84
  7.5 Objective Incentives .................................................................... 85
    7.5.1 Specific Inducements ................................................................ 85
    7.5.2 General Inducements .............................................................. 88
    7.5.3 The Need to Use Persuasion .................................................... 93
  7.6 The Method of Persuasion ................................................................ 93
    7.6.1 The Creation of Coercive Conditions ....................................... 94
    7.6.2 The Rationalization of Opportunity ......................................... 96
    7.6.3 The Inculcation of Motives ...................................................... 96
  7.7 The Economy of Incentives According to Barnard ............................. 98
  7.8 General Purpose and Economic Equilibrium in for-Profit and non-Profit Organizations ......................................................................................... 100
    7.8.1 Analysis of for-Profit Organizations ....................................... 100
    7.8.2 Analysis of non-Profit Organizations ...................................... 106
References .......................................................................................... 108

8 The Compatibility of Effectiveness and Efficiency: The Pillars of Barnard’s Theory of Cooperation ................................................................. 109
  8.1 The Conventional Concepts of Effectiveness and Efficiency ................. 109
  8.2 Efficiency and Effectiveness in Barnard’s Thought .............................. 110
  8.3 The Concepts of Effectiveness and Efficiency Are Not Spontaneously Convergent ................................................................. 112
8.4 The Equilibrium and Sustainability of a Cooperative System Depend on the Ability of Executives to Make Effectiveness and Efficiency Compatible

8.4.1 Introduction

8.4.2 Requirements to Develop Compatibility Between Effectiveness and Efficiency

8.4.3 A Review of the General Organization Goals: The Production and Distribution of Goods and Services

8.4.4 Leadership Based on Responsibility Is Fundamental to Make Effectiveness and Efficiency Converge

References

9.1 Introduction

9.2 Brief Review of the Executive Process and the Integrating Function of Leadership

9.3 The Higher-Order Leadership Function that Shapes the Other Management Functions

9.4 Systematization of Barnard's Thought on the Nature of Leadership and Its Elements

9.4.1 Introduction

9.4.2 The System of Moral Codes

9.4.3 Personal Qualities of the Leader

9.4.4 Summary of Barnard's Thought on the Relations Between the Executive Process, Leadership, and a Valid Cooperative System

9.5 Some Critical Remarks on Barnard's Theory of Leadership

References

10 Summary of the Present Work

11 The Relevance of Barnard’s Theoretical System to the Economic, Social, and Moral Requirements of the Current Knowledge-Based Economy

11.1 Introduction

11.2 Brief Reference to the Characteristics and Needs of the Knowledge-Based Economy

11.3 Barnard's Lessons for Scholars and Executives of the Modern Age

11.3.1 Premise

11.3.2 The Systemic View of Management and Leadership: An Attempt to Develop a Unifying Conceptual Framework for the Structure and Behavior of for-Profit and non-Profit Organizations Based on the General Theory of Systems
11.3.3 The Nature of the Management Process and Its Division Into Functions ........................................ 152
11.3.4 Organizational and Individual Objectives. The Role of Management in Their Harmonization and Integration ......................................................... 153
11.3.5 Rational Organizational Behavior and the Creation of a Hierarchy of Objectives, Decisions, and Organs: The Chain of Means and Ends ......................................................... 153
11.3.6 The Conduct of Complex Organizations Is the Product of a “Pluralistic and Organically Integrated” Decision-Making System ......................................................... 154
11.3.7 The Average Person in an Organization Operates According to a “Limited Rationality Model” ......................... 155
11.3.8 The Theory of Authority: Originality and Influence on Scholars and Managers ........................................ 155
11.3.9 The Mission of for-Profit and non-Profit Organizations ............................................................................. 157
11.3.10 The Economic Equilibrium Necessary for the Survival of Organizations ................................................. 158
11.3.11 Effectiveness and Efficiency: The Basis of the Cooperative System and Lasting Company Success ........................................................................................................ 158

11.4 Final Assessment of the Contemporary Relevance and Originality of Barnard’s Management and Leadership Theories: Answers to the Research Questions Formulated in Chapter 1 ................................................. 159

References .......................................................................................................................................................... 161

12 Limitations of Barnard’s Model .............................................................................................................................. 163
12.1 The Decision-Making Process Is Assigned Lower Importance Than the Organizational and Communications System ............................................................................. 163
12.2 The Actual Role Played by Top Management in Managing Complex Organizations Has Not Been Adequately Explored .............................................................. 165
12.3 Analysis of the Relationship Between Leadership and the Other Functions of the Executive Process ......................................................................................................................... 168
12.4 Excessive Emphasis Placed on Responsibility Rather Than on the Quality of the Ethical Codes That Inspire the Conduct of the Executive ............................................................................. 171
12.5 The Classification of Codes of Conduct Is Not Complete .................................................................................... 173
12.5.1 Assumptions Regarding the Capacities and Behavior of Employees at Work and the Consequent Role Played by the Executive ............................................................................. 176
12.5.2 Assumptions About the Company Mission and Consequent Role of the Executive ........................................................................................................................................................ 179
12.6 There Is No Discussion of Ethical Codes or the Main Management Assumptions to Establish the Preferability of the Various Adoptable Leadership Styles ........................................ 182
12.7 Final Considerations on the Real Philosophy That Permeates the "Cooperative Model" of Barnard ................................................................. 183
References ........................................................................................................ 187